Hello Cohasset! I am writing this today on the most beautiful day, the weather is warm and sunny and I cannot wait to get outside! Is it really the end of February? Anyway, enjoy the next few days as it is going to get cold according to the weather people. We shall see.

GET WELL SOON

I have a special request to start off the column this week for a resident of Cohasset who is known and loved by many. Virginia "Ginny" Barnes is in the hospital and a special friend has asked that prayers and best wishes be sent and said for her. Ginny, all of us here in Cohasset will certainly have you in our thoughts and prayers.

BIG APPLE CIRCUS

Calling all Cohasset Girl Scouts! Now that winter vacation is over and you are back in your routines, don't forget to send in your permission slips and checks for the "Big Apple Circus" Mother/Daughter event. If you need a permission slip, call your troop leader or Laure Kimla at 781-383-8161. Remember that March 8 is the deadline with no exceptions. Hope to see you there.

ALLERGIES

I had an interesting e-mail from a Cohasset resident and parent. It opened up my eyes a bit and I just wanted to spread the news to all of you reading this column. Allergies are a big issue for so many of us, whether they are seasonal, animal related or food related. Because of the large numbers of people who are affected by these allergies, sometimes we need to make a conscious effort to help those who are suffering from them. In schools and children's programs, nuts and milk sometimes need to be eliminated along with other specific foods. I know that I have had conversations with many people who feel this is "unfair" to their own child as they cannot have these items while in a class or program.

Stop and think however, if it were your child who had the allergy and if a parent decided to ignore the requests and sent in a peanut butter sandwich. The outcome could be a very serious one! I know that my children can certainly not have a certain food for the school day if it helps to keep another child safe and I honestly feel that every other child can do the same. Please honor every request in a positive manner and help for your child to learn how to work with someone's situation instead of making it worse.

AROUND TOWN

This goes for animal fur as well. When taking your adorable and fun-loving pet for a walk or to an event, it is not OK to bring your animal into a public building with you. While we all (or most of us) enjoy seeing your dog or cat, many are extremely allergic to the fur and dander and bringing them into schools or other enclosed places can really wreak havoc on those people affected. It is something that will not be too hard to do and will definitely make a difference!

LIBRARY SOCIAL

A wine and cheese social at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library is being held March 13, from 7 to 9 p.m. This fun and informational evening is being offered to meet with the new children's librarian, Sharon Moody and get comfortable with what the public library has to offer for kids of all ages. The Deer Hill PSO will be supplying refreshments as well as introducing the new Web site on the library's computers. This should be a fun night for all and best of all, it is at no charge.

NEW ARRIVAL

Jackie (Plante), CHS '84, and Bob Collari recently welcomed a new daughter into their lives. Maria Elizabeth Collari was born Jan. 29, 2002, weighed in at 6 lbs. 9 oz. and was 20 inches long. Little Maria joins big sister Gina, 31/2, and Dennis, 2, at home in Scituate. Maria and Pat Plante of Cohasset and Carolyn and Dick Collari of North Andover are the very proud grandparents. Congratulations to all of you on this wonderful news.

DEAN'S LIST

UMass Amherst dean's list for the fall, 2001, semester was recently announced and several Cohasset students were listed. Naomi Ansbergs, Carolyn Cameron, Susan Dane, William Kearney, Alexander Schwerin and Eric Wenmark all made the list which means they all had a GPA of 3.5 or better on a four-point scale. Great work to you all.

RUNNING FOR A CAUSE

On April 15, Christopher Valentine of Cohasset will pound the 26.2 miles of pavement as a participant in the 13th annual Dana Farber Marathon Challenge. The DFMC team will join the runners taking part in the 106th running of the Boston Marathon. Christopher, along with his DFMC teammates from 20 states, will run the historic marathon route from Hopkinton to Boston to raise $3 million for cancer research. By raising at least $2,000 each, DFMC runners are funding the Claudia Adams Barr Program in innovative basic breast cancer research at Dana Farber Cancer Institute. To contribute to Christopher's run, send a check payable to Dana Farber Marathon Challenge to the DFMC offices at 152A Trapelo Road, Lincoln, 01773. Indicate that the contribution is for Christopher Valentine. For more information, call 781-259-8881.

2002 MS WALK

John Flanagan of Edward Jones Investments is inviting local businesses and organizations to a Leadership Recruitment Breakfast to kick off the 2002 MS Walk in Cohasset. By attending, you will learn how you can help to end the devastating effects of multiple sclerosis. The breakfast will be held Thursday, March 7, at the Atlantica Restaurant, 8 to 9 a.m. in Cohasset. Plan on joining us if you would like to learn how you and your company can get involved with this fun and important community event. For further information, call John Flanagan or Karen Hurd at 781-383-1996. We hop to see you there.

FUN(D)RAISER

A note from the Deer Hill School:

A Deer Hill grade-five student may be visiting your house from March 1 to March 10 to ask you to purchase a pizza kit from Lil Caesar Pizza Company. Part of the funds from your purchase will go to the student's tuition for the Camp Bournedale Outdoor Education Center trip that he or she will take as a sixth-grade student next year.

Camp Bournedale is in Bourne, a section of Plymouth. The grade-six students go to the overnight camp for five days in September as part of their schooling and they do their fund-raising while in the fifth grade. The tuition is $350 for the week and many of our students raise the majority of the funds needed. This is a unique and fun-filled learning experience for the sixth-grade students and staff. Please assist your local fifth-grader by buying some delicious pizza kits when they come to you. If you are interested and have not seen a fifth-grader, you may call the Deer Hill office at 781-383-6115 on how to place an order. Thank you for your support.

I would like to end this week's column with a quote that was sent to me and really inspired me to think a little.

"You can't understand the world and how you respond to it until you first know yourself. You can't change the things you don't like about yourself until you search out the things that influence you and motivate you and hurt you." Stedman Graham

Have a great week. Remember that the deadline for getting items to me is no later than Mondays at noon.

Support for parents of teens

The Social Service League of Cohasset is offering a support group for parents of teens that are experiencing turbulent times in their lives. The group would provide the opportunity for parents to share their concerns about teen lifestyles and experimentation that may present symptoms of stress and anxiety in the lives of parents.

The confidential support program affords parents the opportunity to share their concerns and explore options to deal with this issue. The discussion is facilitated by a licensed clinical social worker and examines the input from all those with concerns.

This support group is strictly confidential and held every other Monday from 6:30-7:45 p.m. Space is limited to 10. If you are interested, please call 781-383-0771.

Easter egg hunt

The Cohasset Recreation Commission will be holding its annual Easter Egg Hunt on Saturday, March 23 at 12 noon sharp, at the Deer Hill School back field. Children ages 3-11, with their parents or an adult, are invited to hunt for eggs and to greet the Easter Bunny as he arrives via a Cohasset fire truck.

Rain date is March 30 — same time, same place.

Protect drinking water supplies

The First Herring Brook Watershed Initiative and Clean Water Action are offering a training program for South Shore residents on how to protect drinking water. The program will be held on Saturday, March 2, 10 am – 12:30 p.m. at the Mt. Hope Improvement Society Building at the corner of Clapp Road and Cedar Street in Scituate.

"Drinking water is a precious research," said John McNabb, who is director of research and policy for Clean Water Action and is also chairman of the Cohasset Water Commission. "At this training, citizens will learn how to protect their drinking water supply."

At the training, after a short presentation about Scituate's First Herring Brook watershed, attendees will learn how to use the annual Consumer Confidence Reports and the state Source Water Assessment Program to learn about the sources of drinking water supplies, threats to water quality, and how to protect watersheds.

Speakers at the program include McNabb, Chris Bathurst. Water Policy Program Director for Clean Water Action, and Lance van Lenten from the First Herring Brook Watershed Initiative.

For more information, please contact Lance Van Lenten at 781-545-5987 or John McNabb at 781-383-6202.

Snow Row

Bring on the weather! It's time for the Hull Lifesaving Museum's signature rowing race, the Snow Row, that covers a 33/4 mile triangular course starting off the beach at Windmill Point, Hull, and continuing around Sheep Island, past the Peddocks Island day marker, and back to shore.

The 2002 Snow Row Open-Water Rowing Race will be held March 2. The race will start at 12 noon (coxswain's meeting 11:30 a.m.) at the Hull Lifesaving Museum's Windmill Point Boathouse, 85 Main St., Hull. The fee is $15 per rower; spectators are free.

Entirely within view of the boathouse, the event is as much of a thrill for spectators as for participants. It is also a rare opportunity to see, up close, rowers of all ages and their array of wooden pulling boats on the beach and in action — peapods, dories, wherries, whitehalls, ocean shells, kayaks, pilot gigs, captain's gigs and Irish curraghs.

This year, two crews from Cornwall, UK, will join the several hundred youth and adult rowers from all over New England who traditionally participate. Athletes from northern Maine, New York City, and Lake Champlain, Vermont will line up on the beach with competitors from the North Shore, Cape Cod, Duxbury and Boston Harbor.

The race has five boat categories, workboats, livery boats, coxed boats, ocean kayaks and ocean shells.

After watching the excitement of the Snow Row's start, spectators come inside the boathouse to warm up with a cup of hot coffee or cocoa. A mile away, the Lifesaving Museum will be open throughout the day with free admission, and on display, the Small Craft display, as well as other exhibits about lifesaving, lighthouses, storms and shipwrecks. For more information about the event, call Edward P. McCabe, maritime program director, at 781-925-5433 or e-mail: hullmuse@channell.com.

Quilt show benefit

More than 50 beautiful handmade quilts — some centuries old — will be on display at the Second Congregational Church's ninth Annual Quilt Show & Luncheon on Saturday, March 2 from 10:30 a.m. to 2 p.m.. The proceeds from this event benefit The Boston Medical Center's Pediatric AIDS Charitable Trust and its Reach Out and Read Program. Tickets are $10 each and include the quilt show and a gourmet luncheon served from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. For tickets, please send a check payable to the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave., Cohasset, MA 02025, or stop by the church office weekdays between 9 a.m. and 1p.m. For more information call (781) 383-0345.

Swing into Spring at CMI gala

Mark your calendar for Friday, March 15 at 7:30 p.m. when the Cohasset Maritime Institute (CMI) will host a "Swing Into Spring" Gala Event at the Cohasset Lighthouse Keeper's Residence. The festivities will include food and drink, live music and a silent auction to help kick-off the 2002 season.

CMI Director, Jack Buckley said this event "not only marks the start of a new season, it also marks the start of a fund-raising campaign for new and improved ways to get people on the water!"

"CMI is planning to host a fun evening for returning and new members and their guests," Buckley said. Join in the festivities and renew old friendships, make new acquaintances, and to learn what's new at CMI this season.

For more information, call Jack Buckley at 781-383-8261 or Mary Sease at 781-383-8318.

Auditions slated for Hull musical

Hull Performing Arts announces open auditions for the musical "Pump Boys and Dinettes" by John Foley, Mark Hardwick, Debra Monk, Cass Morgan, John Schimmel and Jim Wann.

This musical tribute to life by the roadside takes place at a gas station on Highway 57. Across the street is an eatery called the "Double Cupp Diner." The four guys at the station have been known to do some auto repairs, but only when aided by quantities of time and beer. The Cupp sisters celebrate their home cooking with the same zeal they bring to being neighborly with the boys.

The show will be directed by Simpson Moore and the musical director will be Kathy Clancy.

The auditions are on Sunday, March 3, and Thursday, March 10, at 7:30 p.m. at the Anne Scully Senior Center, 197A Samoset Ave., Hull. Bring a song to sing. "Pump Boys and Dinettes" will be cast with three men and three women. Call 781-925-2406 for directions and more information about the show.

This project is sponsored, in part, by a grant from the Hull Cultural Council, a local agency supported by the Massachusetts Cultural Council.

Daffodil Days seeks volunteers

Celebrate the arrival of spring by volunteering for the American Cancer Society's Daffodil Days. Volunteers are needed now to serve as sales coordinators in their towns or businesses, or to work in our office in March to map out driving routes, or to help make deliveries the week of April 1st. With your help during Daffodil Days, the American Cancer Society can raise the vital funds for research, education, advocacy and patient services programs, while bringing hope and help to cancer patients in your community. To volunteer or to order your bouquet of daffodils for $6, call the American Cancer Society at 1-888-648-4880 and press 3 for ext. 243. Orders must be placed by March 15, 2002. The American Cancer Society is the nationwide, voluntary health organization dedicated to eliminating cancer as a major health problem by preventing cancer, saving lives and diminishing suffering from cancer through research, education, advocacy and service.

TIC auction anchored by Cohasset woman

The Talking Information Center for the visually impaired is holding its fifth annual radio auction at the end of March with the help of WATD (95.9). Run like the Channel 2 auction, items are bid on by telephone after being offered over the air by WATD personalities. Proceeds go directly to TIC.

There is something for everyone, and all for a good cause.

Tammy Elliott of Cohasset is chairman of the TIC radio auction this year.

Movie and museum passes, tickets to concerts and attractions such as Edaville Railroad, dinners at restaurants or from caterers and all sorts of memberships are on the block for charity. There are also overnight packages ranging from the Colonnade Hotel in Boston to the Carriage House on Nantucket (complete with ferry passe) or at local hotels and Bed and Breakfasts.

There is something for everyone, and all for a good cause. Phil Collier, Channel 2 auction Coordinator, and volunteer Auction Coordinator Tammy Elliott of Cohasset, run the three-day event.

TIC needs volunteers to answer the phones and take bids; local businesses to donate items - and get on-air credit as the items are auctioned; or sponsors for each hour, or call and bid on an item. The auction will run from noon to 5 p.m. Tuesday, March 19, Wednesday, March 20, and Thursday, March 21. It is held at TIC's broadcast studios in Marshfield but you simply need to tune into WATD 95.9 FM to be a part of it.

The Talking Information Center is a non-profit reading service that broadcasts newspapers, magazines, books and special consumer information 24 hours days, seven days a week to more than 20,000 visually impaired listeners throughout Massachusetts. To learn how you can help with the auction or to learn more about TIC call 781-834-4400 or 800-696-9595.

Question of the Week

The selectman's race promises to perk up what would otherwise be a sleepy April 6 Town Election. Political newcomer Roger Q. Hill is challenging incumbents Fred Koed and Ronnie McMorris in a three-way race for two seats on the Board of Selectmen.

So in keeping with our tradition, we will pose a Question of the Week to local candidates. In the past, we have limited Question of the Week to those running for contested seats, but this year we'll make an exception for the candidate for School Committee, Jane Pescatore, who is running unopposed for the seat being vacated by Stephanie Noble. With so much news about MCAS, potential cuts in state aid, the rising cost of special education and the upcoming reaccreditation of the high school – we think our readers would be well served by knowing where Mrs. Pescatore stands on the issues.

All candidates opposed or unopposed, who have not already done so, are invited to submit photographs and formal statements announcing their candidacies.

Starting next week, we will feature candidates' answers to the Question of the Week. Responses should be brief — no more than 300 words — and must be received by 5 p.m., Monday. Candidates are asked to be specific and make every word count. Submissions will be cut if they exceed the word limit. (We use the word-count feature on the computer to determine the number of words.)

The following are the first Questions of the Week:

For selectman candidates:

Some say Cohasset is in danger of becoming a haven only for the rich. What can you do to see that doesn't occur?

For the School Committee candidate:

The School Committee negotiates teacher salary increases of 3 percent or more, not including steps, when the town can only raise taxes 2-1/2 percent a year without an override. Something may have to give in the school budget. What are your priorities?

Candidates may reply by e-mail at mford@cnc.com; by fax at 781-741-2931, or by dropping off their responses at the Cohasset Mariner office in the Hingham Journal Building, 73 South St., Hingham Square. Items may also be dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street. However they choose to deliver their answers, candidates should adhere to the 5 p.m. Monday deadline.

We will also publish a weekly Candidates' Corner, which will be limited to a few paragraphs (about 150 words), from any candidate who chooses to submit dates of coffees, fund-raisers and the like.

The Mariner will not accept letters to the editor from candidates or letters endorsing or attacking particular candidates. The Mariner will publish letters about campaign issues from citizens not seeking election.

If you have questions, or would like to suggest a Question of the Week, call Mary Ford at 781-741-2933 or contact her by e-mail at mford@cnc.com.

Friends of Harbor to meet

The Friends of Cohasset Harbor will hold an open meeting at the Minot Lightkeepers' Residence on Wednesday, March 6 at 7:30 p.m.

Life in Cohasset

TO THE EDITOR:

It was a quiet month in Woebegone East, where new houses are humongous, taxes above average and some adults childish.

Dean Rizzo (Executive Director of Cohasset Revitalization Corporation) has been labeled "Mayor of Cohasset" by a critic, on the grounds that he is getting everything he wants. Most of what he gets is brickbats, maybe the nice title makes up for his frustrations.

The "Friends of Cohasset Harbor" got petulant because the revitalization consultant didn't immediately change his presentation sketch (prepared as a basis for discussion at a series of workshops) to suit their notions of aesthetics, went whining to the Selectmen, who overreacted and wrote the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation to do no more public forums. Selectmen recanted at next meeting, having heard plenty from good people who believe in freedom of speech and assembly and are trying to work constructively with CRC .

Although the USA once prided itself on personal freedoms, we continue to evolve into a people imbued with a passion to regulate each other. A small example: the Selectmen have agreed to consider a warrant article which would limit the number of building permits issued each year, at least those that permit tear-down and rebuilding into a larger house. The argument is that such improvement changes the character of the town. Bigger houses pay more taxes, and the number of children that would burden our school system seems to decrease with increasing house size, but it seems worth limiting the individual's freedom to sell to someone with the bucks to rebuild.

The Planning Board nixed support for the CRC's proposal to put utility wires in the village center underground , but wondered why the CRC did not include burying wires around the Town Common!

The venerable Social Service League has soaring (and potentially costly) ambitions to expand into a plethora of counseling services for all ages.

Snowplows continued to sit and rust, but we still have a lot of March.

Sensitivity training

TO THE EDITOR:

In reply to the letters concerning a parents' criticism of a faculty member's loudspeaker a.m. announcement impromptu imitation of a black person in connection with the Patriots' game:

As a parent of children who attended Cohasset schools, I am concerned about the way in which this situation was handled.

To recap, a parent felt the white teacher's takeoff on a black person was inappropriate to be aired for students in morning announcements. This led to a universal put-down of the parent by school officials and some parents for her "overreaction" to an innocent event.

One might inquire how to solve this problem. My goals would include allowing for an open forum at a School Committee meeting on the issue, with a panel of experts trained in this kind of matter.

Should a white person imitate a black person over a loud speaker? My students at the college where I teach were of mixed opinions. An Irish student thought it was harmless and even "funny."

One Chinese student was really sensitive to white people imitating her accent.

I do imitations of Eddie Murphy in "Trading Places" because I've seen the movie more than 50 times and know the dialogue by heart. Does that offend a person of color? What is my (hidden) intention? Can I escape being a racist due to my Southern heritage and the fact that I am now living in an almost all white town?

Maybe what is needed here is some sensitivity training for all of us in Cohasset, living as we do, so removed from the world around us. How our sheltered children will fare in the broader world depends a great deal on what example we set now as to what is discrete acceptable behavior in a multicultural society.

Should there be a forum for discussion on this subject? I believe it would be useful to move this issue to a wider venue and get out of the narrow confines of a personal dispute. We cannot know how it feels to be of another cultural background unless we investigate the problem.

Preserving charm in the harbor

TO THE EDITOR:

I said at a recent meeting of Cohasset Selectmen, that in my opinion, the imposing black iron lampposts proposed to line the harbor at Border Street are impossibly ugly. If the proposed plans for the harbor go through, I will have to look at that ugliness across from my front lawn. I also believe the proposed black iron fence is impossibly ugly.

However, taste is an individual matter. I do not expect everyone to agree with me — nor should they. Indeed, one of the selectmen thought that the historic white, two-board fence that now borders the harbor looks dilapidated. To my eye, it seems exactly right. It is also true that appearance depends, to an extent, on context. The black iron fence that would be so offensive along Border Street, for example, seems suitable to my eye when installed around the grand non-colonial mansion on the other side of the harbor.

The important issue, however, is not a contest about personal taste, but the preservation of the character and charm of one of the loveliest places on earth. We should not be judging taste, light pole by light pole, or fence by fence. Cohasset is an enchanting village of colonial heritage. We have accepted the notion that preservation of its character, within reason, has great value. We guard the Common with vigor, for example, demanding that homes overlooking it comply with reasonable standards of appearance.

With that in mind, I can see no reason for the desecration of the harbor now proposed. There is nothing in the design or appearance of the proposed lights and fence that is consistent with Cohasset or its colonial heritage. The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation (CRC) which proposes the changes, has offered nothing to suggest that anything needs to be changed at the harbor — no traffic study, no pedestrian count, no summary of accidents at the harbor, no reports of people falling into the water. And there is no showing that any other designs were considered, that the proposed designs are superior to others, that they are in keeping with the character of the village, or that they will enhance the attractiveness of the village or its property values.

The present sidewalk on Border Street is more than adequate — it is demarcated from the roadway by a bright, white-painted line and separated from the roadway by a line of utility poles. Where it borders the harbor, it is raised perhaps, half a foot, above the roadway. While it is true that cars sometimes mount the sidewalk between the utility poles to park illegally, that would stop promptly if the cars were ticketed, or if "No Parking" or "No Parking on the Sidewalk" signs were up and enforced.

And why is parking allowed along Border Street anyway? There are only a handful of residences there, all of which have adequate parking off the road. Two commercial establishments, a motel and a restaurant complex, are supposed to provide adequate parking for its customers off the road. Thousands of similar establishments on the South Shore manage to do so — why not these?

Most of the roads in Cohasset do not have sidewalks at all, including some that are walked, without incident, by children going to school. Most of the length of Cohasset's seaside roadway has no sidewalk and no fence. Many more people walk safely along the shore on Jerusalem Road, which for most of its length, has no fence and no sidewalk, than on Border Street, which has both. Virtually no one walks on Border Street at night even though there is plenty of ambient light to make one's way safely. There is absolutely no need for additional street lighting. Certainly none has or can be demonstrated by those who plan to install it.

Why then is the harbor being singled out for pretentious decoration? In addition to providing limited anchorage for pleasure boats, it is a working harbor for families that derive their livelihood from the sea. It's heritage and function are clear and uncluttered and part of the irreplaceable charm of the village. What is the source of the urge to change all that? Is it simply that consultants are paid for change and not paid when there is no change?

As I stepped to my front door the other evening, I was struck, as I have been so many times before, by the staggering beauty of the dark night over Cohasset Harbor. The Big Dipper was standing upright on its handle. Minot's Light glimmered in the distance. The white-board fence dimly defined the harbor edge. I wondered if they would all be gone next year.

Cohasset speaks about its future

MASTER PLAN

GROWTH & DEVELOPEMENT COMMITTEE

Master plan survey results now available

In 2000, Cohasset Selectmen created the Growth & Development Committee to help draft a town master plan to provide a thoughtful and long term strategy to manage town growth. This plan is perhaps a bit overdue, since Cohasset last completed one in 1961. This will eventually guide future plans and decisions for appropriate growth, effective transportation as well as infrastructure, education, and environmental protection. Long-term planning efforts are underway in many towns such as Hingham, Norwell, Scituate and Duxbury.

The ultimate goal of the Cohasset Growth and Development Committee is to work with all town citizens and stakeholders to build consensus and help create an overall shared vision and strategy for the future for Cohasset. A community planning consultant is currently being selected to facilitate the process and provide the economic and strategic planning assistance necessary to complete the plan. After a rigorous selection process, the choice of consultant is expected to be announced next week.

A master plan should reflect the key values and issues of its citizens in the areas of the environment, economic base and community character. So to share and gather this information, numerous neighborhood forums and meetings with many town committees and boards have been conducted. To maintain town-wide communication, numerous articles were written for the Mariner, a newsletter was sent to all residents last Summer. Then, in November 2001 every registered voter received a survey to gather input and ideas. We now have the first installment in reporting the results of that survey.

Results from Opinion Survey

We will report the results as space allows over the coming weeks leading up to the March Town Meeting. A full report (and summary of progress) is available at the Planning Board office at Town Hall. The following are results from a survey mailed to 5,425 Cohasset voters and 120 Chamber of Commerce members. 618 surveys were received over the past three months. This represents over a 10 percent response rate. Data was compiled through a combination of volunteer and professional help and was audited for accuracy.

In addition to the following summary, numerous comments were collected and tallied and are also available. The results again clearly underscored the residents commitment to Cohasset, with a significant majority indicating they plan to stay forever or until they retire. Most (nearly 50 percent) stated they came for the beauty of the environment and many felt that it was a great place to raise kids.

Residents were asked to identify and rank issues in several areas, (A) top concerns facing Cohasset today, (B) most and least important issues for Cohasset in the future, and (C) areas Cohasset should act on.

Cohasset today

The results were fairly consistent and in some cases surprising. Town fiscal management is clearly an issue, as the top concern by far was the tax burden. Forty two percent felt it was extremely or very important. The other top concerns were protecting natural resources (32 percent), the train impact (29 percent), preserving open space (28 percent), preserving community character (28 percent), quality of services (25 percent) and affordable housing (21 percent).

Cohasset's Future is in Its Character and Resources

When asked about the future of Cohasset, there was little doubt about the priorities. Well over 70 percent felt that our water and resources, including open space are the most important priorities. Fully six of the top ten rated issues were water resource and waste water related. The next most important priority was again fiscal management, as two of the top ten issues were tax rates and fiscal management. Rounding out the top ten most important issues were open space and public education.

Cohasset's Character

Clearly maintaining Cohasset's beauty and character as well as natural resources are the top priority when you look down the list of issues. Water, open space and preservation make up no less than 12 of the top 20 issues.

Cohasset Services

The third most important area for residents seems to be the quality of services, as four of the top 20 issues have to do with education, town government, fire and police services.

What should Cohasset do

Where things get interesting is when residents were asked what they feel Cohasset should do to plan for the future. There was little doubt that maintaining town character was at the top of the list (over 90 percent agree or strongly agree) and fully seven of the top ten issues were focused on protecting the water, views, access, open space and wildlife.

Limits to growth

Three of the top ten also included strong interest in limiting growth. 75 percent believe we should limit the size of houses relative to lot size, over 70 percent agree or strongly agree we should limit residential development and 64 percent agree or strongly agree we should limit population growth. Open space is also a major priority, 63 percent of residents feel the town should purchase more.

Housing and access

Other priorities that emerge include more senior citizen and affordable housing and access to the harbor and waterfront.

Getting to a vision for Cohasset

As indicated, these results have been combined with the neighborhood forums, town committee and board input and are now being crafted into preliminary Vision and Values statements for the town to review and comment on in the coming weeks. We hope you will all take the time to review the research and comment on the results and all the activity by the committee. It is important to all of us who are concerned about the future of Cohasset. The full report and a draft progress report are available by email or in hard copy by contacting Liz Harrington, Town Planner at Town Hall.

Members of the Growth & Development Committee are: Clark Brewer, Patti Keville, Tom Callahan, Ronnie McMorris, Debbie Cook, Peter Pratt, Bill Good, Rick Swanborg, Elizabeth Harrington and Michael Westcott.

Cover up at Justice Dept.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Back in the days before Playboy and Penthouse, a small art gallery in New York City was stuck with 2,000 copies of a lithographed poster known as "September Morn," which depicted a nude young woman standing, tastefully covered by strategically placed hands, in a pool.

Then the gallery hired a press agent named Harry Reichenbach. Reichenbach knew what to do. He arranged one of the posters prominently in the window of the gallery and placed a call to Anthony Comstock, head of the Anti-Vice Society, who was then in the midst of a campaign to drive sin and kindred pleasures from the Big Apple.

"This picture is an outrage!" cried the publicist. "It's undermining the morals of our city's youth!"

Reichenbach took Comstock down to the gallery to see for himself — after first hiring (at 50 cents a day) a group of young boys to stand in front of the window, poking each other knowingly in the ribs and "making grimaces too sophisticated for their years."

Too many Americans will side with the nudists.

Comstock went into action immediately, demanding the removal of the poster, and when that gambit failed, taking the matter to court, to the delight of New York's penny press, which went after the story with the enthusiasm of the Boston Herald going after Judges Murphy and Lopez.

As a result, the 2,000 copies of "September Morn" that couldn't be sold for 10 cents apiece as an obscure print B.C. (before Comstock) became seven million copies that were sold for a dollar each as a work of art.

Reichenbach and "September Morn" came to mind the other day when I read that the Justice Department in Washington spent some $8,000 for curtains to cover up two semi-nude Art Deco statues in the department's Great Hall that offended Attorney General John Ashcroft.

"It was done for TV aesthetics," said a spokeswoman for the attorney general whose name is, believe it or not, Barbara Comstock (no relation, I think).

Shades of Harry Reichenbach!

I hope this isn't the opening shot in the Bush administration's War on Nudity because the chances of winning are considerably less than the chances of finding Osama bin Laden and winding up the War on Terrorism. Too many Americans will side with the nudists.

Else why do I get the feeling that someone, somewhere is busily turning out copies of Ashcroft's offending statues with one naked breast exposed, and plans to sell them to the unwashed millions, although not necessarily as works of art?

At the same time that the Justice Department was engaged in its big cover up, police in Austin, Texas, the home state of the President, announced that they were rescinding their plan to issue $500 tickets to any woman who flashed a bare breast during the city's Mardi Gras celebration.

Some did last year, and it led to a riot sparked by over enthusiastic males.

"Naked breasts do not cause riots," said Caroline Estes, an Austin resident. "Too much testosterone causes riots."

Not in the Justice Department's Great Hall, that's for sure.

Curing a bad case of writer's block

MY VIEW

EVAN SCHIFF

Know what the hardest thing in the world to do is? Write a column when you have nothing to write about. All right, it may not be the most difficult task the human race has ever faced, but it's up there. Right up there with squeezing the last bit of toothpaste from the tube or trying to touch your toes.

Maybe I should write about Greenbush, or the CRC, or the upcoming political race. Hmmm, how about no, no and no.

I could write about the Red Sox, or the Pats or the Celtics successful season. I could talk at length about the dismal state of the Catholic Church or the equally dismal state of current budgets.

There's always a top ten list to be made, or an issue to be looked at from a different angle.

I could write about how the media gets a bum rap. How not all of us are entertainers like Dan Rather or Stone Phillips. Some of us actually enjoy reporting and writing and have no desire to unearth the most confidential secrets of Buddy, the former first dog.

I could talk about the fact that I've written more in the last month than the in last 22 years combined.

I figured out the longest word you can make out of any one row on a keyboard is "typewriter." Look it up, try and prove me wrong.

I could talk about the new guitar I'm about to buy. A sweet Taylor 710ce that can make even my fumbled attempts sound like an accomplished player. I can talk about my dreams to be a rock star, or professional surfer, or anchor for ESPN.

Did you know Chicago is nicknamed the "windy city" because its politics shift like the wind, not its air flow?

I could bore everyone with another column about how much I've learned in town or I could set everyone in an even more catatonic state and talk about my love life.

Want to know what my favorite movies are? How about favorite bands or food? Nah, I didn't think so.

I could write an in depth essay on every state I drove through when I drove cross-country or every country I visited traveling around Europe. But you've probably read those stories written by better authors than me. Robert Pirsig, John Steinbeck and Jack Kerouac are just a few of my favorites who have beaten me to the punch.

I could write about how hard it is to come up with 600 words when the words aren't coming. Looking at a white screen and just wanting to fill it up with 600 prepositions.

Maybe I should stick to writing something I know about, like sports or uh, sports. That's not true, I also know other stuff, like the importance of having a good vocabulary.

I could write about my biggest annoyances, intellectual snobs, those who pontificate on issues that only they wish to hear about. Or people who say they'll call you back and don't. Boy, I really hate that.

It's probably easiest to write about something close to your heart, but I'm sure you all have your own family tales to tell.

Hey, what do you know, 600 words and I haven't written a thing. Until next time, Cohasset.

Harlequin ducks are the clowns of the sea

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

Harlequin ducks are small, colorful sea ducks. They have rounded heads, stubby bills, and short stocky bodies.

Harlequin Ducks are attention-getting ducks. Even the Latin name histrionicus histrionicus grabs one's attention. "Histrionics", of course, means theatrical arts or performances. This duck takes its name from one of the main characters in Commedia dell'Arte, the Italian comic theater of the 16th and 17th centuries. Improvisation of a basic story was the trademark of this traveling theatre troupe. The characters and the costumes were standard, but the story would adapt to current events or a particular locale. The acrobatic clown character who wore a cat mask and tights with multi-colored diamond-shaped patterns was called "Arlecchino" in Italian, or "Harlequin" in French..

Male Harlequin Ducks have blue-gray plumage with rust-colored flanks. Accents of bright white spots and bold white lines splashed at varying angles across the head and body create a patterned look suggestive of Harlequin's costume. This small duck is not only striking in appearance, but it also looks exactly like the picture in field guides, leaving no confusion about its identity. At least that is true for the male. The female is brownish gray all over, except for some white smudgy spots on its face. If not observed at close range, it can easily be confused with female scoters or even female Buffleheads.

Harlequin Ducks love turbulent water. In the winter they enjoy heavy surf along rocky ocean coasts where they dive right into the fast-moving water looking for crustaceans and small mollusks to eat. A nail on the end of their beak helps them gather chitons and barnacles that attach themselves strongly to rocks. Come spring they move inland to find nesting places near rapidly flowing rivers. They can walk along the bottom of a swift river just as dippers do. Moving against the current, they examine stones and rocks for insect larvae or mayfly nymphs. This acrobatic behavior in rough water is not without hazard. Many birds have been found with old bone fractures.

Harlequins are secretive during the breeding season, making it difficult to study their nesting habits. They usually build their nests near rivers on the ground under bushes or in rock cavities or sometimes in hollow tree stumps. During courtship, male harlequins, along with the usual bobbing and neck displays, make a squeaking noise, somewhat like a mouse. Along the coast of Maine, this earns them the nickname of "sea mouse". After the five or six eggs hatch, the males return to the coast to molt. This leaves more food for the young. The female leads her small downy ducklings to the water very soon after hatching. They quickly learn to swim in rough water and to find food. As soon as possible the females then leave to join the males at the coast to go through their own molt. The babies are left behind to find their way to the coast on their own, either by swimming down rivers to the ocean or when necessary by flying.

Although there appear to be two or even three separate populations of Harlequin Ducks, there is not enough evidence at this point to declare that any of these populations represents a sub-species Until recently, it was thought that there was one western population and one eastern population. Now after some satellite tracking studies by biologists with the Canadian Wildlife Service, it has been shown that the eastern group includes two distinct wintering populations, one in Greenland and one in eastern North America. Someday DNA studies may determine whether all these birds are from the same genetic pool or not.

Harlequin Ducks were declared an Endangered Species in eastern Canada in 1990. In 2001 they were downlisted to Species of Special Concern. In the United States, there is concern because of their vulnerability to oil spills, but they have not officially been declared endangered or threatened. The Exxon Valdez oil spill in Alaska was very hard on harlequins. Not only were birds killed outright, but their reproductive rates were way down for several years and even now are only slowly recovering. The fact that harlequins do not reach maturity until 2 or 3 years of age, and that they lay fewer eggs than other ducks, adds to the slowness of their recovery.

Fortunately for us, part of the eastern population of Harlequin Ducks winters along the New England Atlantic coast. Cape Ann always has them, but the nearest place for us to view them is in North Scituate. Take route 3A south to Gannett Road where you go left. Go all the way to the end, crossing Hatherly Road at the light. Turn left at the water, drive to the small parking area just before buildings appear on the right. Park here and look out to sea. Sometimes harlequins can be seen near the rocks from this vantage point. Next, continue along until this road towards the Glades. Park at the end of the high seawall just before the beach. Frequently there are Harlequin Ducks fairly close in. They should stay around until mid-April at least. There have been as many as eight or more at North Scituate this winter. While there, look around for loons, grebes, scoters, goldeneyes, Purple Sandpipers and Great Cormorants.

Skinflint to spendthrift

TO THE EDITOR:

RE.: Bury Those Wires

The Mariner's article, "Bury Those Wires" that supports the Town Meeting spending article is the most recent in a long list of endorsements that are well intended but superficial. If you like a spending proposal, you advocate for it without analyzing the cost impact and financing alternatives. How many times have you used the admonition, "It will only cost the average homeowner $50 or $75 or $200..."?

Have you simply embraced the proposal(s) as "nice to have" without doing "due diligence" on prioritization, cost containment, revenue alternatives and value analysis? I agree that it would be nice to "Bury Those Wires" concurrent with sidewalk renovation, but I was brought up in the old school that emphasizes good maintenance, budget planning and ties income to expenses.

You cannot do everything at once. Cohasset has gone from one extreme to the other: skinflint to spendthrift. You are correct, we have draperies, carpets, a sofa, kitchen cabinets, etc. that need replacing, but we cannot afford any of those expenses right now. We have to prioritize and right now the college education of our youngest child is paramount.

It is ironic that you editorial is next to Hamilton's cartoon that is equally ill conceived. If I were Peter Roy, I would tell Cohasset to "go fly a kite." He impeccably manages harbor front properties that have historically struggled to be financial viable. Will burying the wires enhance business tax revenues as much as Don Staszko's Stop & Shop Plaza expansion proposal, or Peter's personal investment in the harbor infrastructure?

If the accurate answer is "yes," then let's "Bury Those Wires" as a top priority contingent upon affordability and a cost-benefit analysis of all prioritized capital budge spending proposals. "Due diligence" comes first. The Mariner endorsed a school renovation project that exceeds actual need by $20,000,000 and will saddle taxpayers with supporting a "mega" physical plant for utilities costs, maintenance, etc. that will "croak" Cohasset taxpayers for the next 50 years. At the same time, we keep our police and firefighters working in an atrocious, antiquated station house. Which is more important: adequate facilities for our public-safety workers or buried wires?

While you're at it, please figure out why the sewer commissioners raised "flow" rates by 33 percent, effective July 1. The last time I looked, the Year 2002 Social Security increase was 2.6 percent.

Runway opposed

TO THE EDITOR:

Runway 14/32 — Myths and Realities.

MYTH #1: Because air traffic does not fly over you now, you are not affected by jets.

REALITY: There are 147,000 jets that fly over the South Shore each year, dispersing more than 5,700 tons of burned jet fuel containing 12.5 percent carcinogens. You and your children breathe in some percentage of what's dispersed every single day. The recent cancer study at Chicago's O'Hare Airport has found that communities as close to Logan, as Cohasset, Hingham and Hull are, have two-to-three times the EPA acceptable risk of exposure to cancer.

MYTH #2: Even if flights over the South Shore quadruple, it won't affect me.

REALITY: The amount of burned jet fuel containing 12.5 percent carcinogens will increase approximately 34 percent. The subsequent dispersion will be cast over a wider area. We are talking about emissions from more than 10,000 tons of burned jet fuel over Cohasset if the runway is built! Chances are, you and your family will be affected.

MYTH #3: The noise is not bothersome to me now and it won't bother me then.

REALITY: Massport is planning to fan out the huge increase of flights over many new flight paths. Noise-wise, if you don't have flights coming low over you now, you are likely to have them once the runway is built. Sixty-five dB noise contours, the point at which individuals experience unlivable conditions due to aircraft noise, will likely extend into South Hingham, perhaps as far as the Hanover line, according to our aviation acoustics expert, who is the U.S. Delegate to the International Noise Standards Commission. Furthermore, the noise will likely be continuous; and where there is noise, there are fuel emissions.

MYTH #4: It will not be as bad as a few complainers have been saying.

REALITY: It may be worse than what people have been saying, according to national aviation and pollution experts hired by the towns of Cohasset, Hingham and Hull.

MYTH #5: The people in charge will figure something out if it gets too bad.

REALITY: Governor Swift, Massport, and the FAA have determined that the way to increase capacity at Logan, and maintain their monopoly over the other airports while building the potential careers of a few individuals, is to direct two-thirds of all flights over the South Shore — that's what Massport has figured out.

MYTH #6: If you fly, you will have fewer delays at Logan and flying will be safer.

REALITY: According to Professor Odoni of M.I.T., the world's expert on delays and airport capacity, delays will be significantly worse if the runway is built, increasing by as much as 150 percent. Furthermore, regional jet pilots, the ones likely to use the runway, are questioning its safety, given the already crowded conditions at Logan. Apparently, safety to Massport is not as important as political and monetary gains.

MYTH #7: There is nothing that I can do.

REALITY: You can work in your communities as an educator, attend Town Meetings and vote on articles to support this fight. You can contribute to the South Shore Jet Pollution Charitable Trust by going to its Web site, www.southshorejetpollution.org; or contact Linda Wakeman, Ralph Dormitzer, Ansley Pearce, Justin Vanderlugt or Eric Oddleifson.

What are the motives?

TO THE EDITOR:

Murray Campbell weighs in on the harbor's proposed motifs by saying that the reason the public does not want a wrought iron fence surrounding the harbor is because they do not like Peter Roy. I, for one, think it is a bad idea and have met Peter on a couple of occasions and perceive him to be a good guy.

Murray is from Western Canada and may not realize that wrought iron and salt water do not mix. I see workers at Peter's house constantly trying to stay ahead of the rust invasion on his wrought iron fence. Who will do that eternal maintenance job, the D P.W? If Murray objects to the existing board fence, picture his chagrin at the look of a contrived rusty barrier spanning the harbor. Our waterway is already pathetically regarded as unfriendly to visiting yachtsmen, think what a rusty fortress surrounding it will do to that perception.

The other main ingredient of this proposal is to cantilever a sidewalk out over the harbor. Why would anyone with a lick of common sense want to reduce the footprint size of an already tiny space by some 20,000 square feet; and at the same time create a perimeter of rock wall void of sunlight, prone to the proliferation of slime?

This all begs the question, what are the motives? Are we trying to enhance Cohasset as a tourist destination? And where to stash all the cars? Do we want to become a kayaker's mecca? When I walk by and see them unwittingly do those rollover exercises over rocks they don't know are there, and surface with either a horrified or ignorantly bold look on their faces, I am astonished none of them have drowned.

The selectmen are a curious bunch wanting to know what the problem is with such extensive free planning. May I remind them that nothing is free, and that planning with such obvious bias has the potential to be disturbing. It does seem that proposals that were not right in principle for the town at one time now are O.K. as long as they bring tax revenues to the equation. Keep hammering away at that ridiculous Town Meeting format, and get what you want. I see a referendum procedure as much more of a consensus; and view a hundred or so "Yeas" from a cultivated group at a special town meeting as the ultimate in special interest. People should not be surprised that a system implemented 200 years ago may no longer serve it's purpose. Look at what has become of the fifth amendment.

So what are the solutions? Who, knows, but if a new sidewalk is needed along the harbor and the people want to keep the old fence and the original look, and it ends up being only wide enough for a double baby carriage and not a triple, the C.R.C. should take heed of that. If for the common good the sidewalk over the bridge should remain where it is, not requiring people to cross at its only dangerous spot (the south side of the bridge where the road dips) then so be it. And if they think they are going to deck over the beautiful ledge area at the entrance to Government Island, I will personally urge the (two old families) to take time out from their 200-year-old war and band together to chain saw it away.

Great civilizations have been destroyed by many things in the past, generally war. Perhaps our civilization will be brought down by our obsession with money. Maybe Cohasset will go down in the history books as someplace that became someplace else because of money. I only know one thing; if Peter got fed up with us all which would have happened to me a long time ago, then C.R.C. would go back to being a can of good spray oil, and very quickly.

Go Skippers hockey, a fine band of young men!

CANDIDATES CORNER

Hill announces run for selectman

Roger Q. Hill, 42, of 19 Highland Ave. this week announced his candidacy for the three-year term on the Cohasset Board of Selectmen.

"I seek election of the office of Selectman to restore a sense of public purpose, accountability, and priority-setting to the Board. As we go into a period of economic downturn, we need to set budgetary priorities and plan for what could be a severe time of fiscal constraint. We also need to do a far better job of defending the larger interest of the town when we look at the major development projects facing us," Hill said.

"The state let us down," he said. "I, however, don't see the selectmen preparing for the strong possibility of intense fiscal pressure hitting us next fiscal year because of what the state has done. Why did the selectmen keep pushing for a new police station as recently as last fall's special town meeting — at a time when it was clear to other communities that there was a severe problem with the school's funds?"

On other issues, Hill expressed his desire to serve as a selectman in order to urge a stronger defense of the town's interest on a variety of fronts, including the Avalon Bay proposal, and development in and around Cohasset Harbor.

"I join many Cohasset residents in asking why the Board of Selectmen and its staff have not been more aggressive in defending the town against the obvious threat presented by Avalon Bay," said Hill. "With its plan for 254 apartments — an increase of almost a full 10 percent in Cohasset's housing units at one time — I can't understand why several selectmen and their town manager make statements urging caution in our defense of the town, and at times actually welcome the proposed development."

"Avalon Bay's negative impact on the Cohasset schools alone argue that the selectmen need to join the Planning Board and School Committee in fighting this highly-detrimental proposal," he said.

Roger Q. Hill

In commenting on recent issues involving the harbor area, Hill asked "Why have the selectmen not supported our Harbor Committee in restricting the size of boats moored at private docks? It baffles me why our elected selectmen can't see that unrestricted vessel sizes on private docks threatens both our lobster fleet and those of us who are recreational boaters," Hill said. "Add that to the strong perception that the public has not had an adequate voice in the revitalization of the harbor area, and we understand why so many Cohasset residents are very concerned with Town Hall's approach to these issues."

Hill, a lifelong resident of Cohasset, manages both his own carpentry business and a commercial realty investment trust, which owns a block of stores in the Route 3A highway business district. He and his wife, Joanne Cannon Hill have a three-year-old son, Quentin, who starts nursery school in the fall of this year. He serves on the House Committee of the Cohasset Yacht Club and is a member of the South Shore Art Center where he was voted 2000's Volunteer of the Year.

Hill welcomes Cohasset residents to call him at his home at 781-383-0333.

Report: MBTA expansion, impossible without state

Says T can't afford to build Greenbush

By Rick Collins
RICK.COLLINS@STATEHOUSENEWS.COM

The MBTA can't afford a series of planned expansions, station modernizations, and needed maintenance without state help, according to a new report released Tuesday by a pair of Bay State think tanks.

The report, authored by the Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation (MTF) and the Pioneer Institute for Public Policy Research, says the MBTA "cannot afford to build proposed expansion projects (including Greenbush rail restoration) without sacrificing critical maintenance and modernization of the existing system or incurring an even higher mountain of debt and undermining its still-fragile finances."

A new state law requiring the agency to operate in a "tight fiscal box" means extending commuter service to New Bedford/Fall River and Scituate, and other projects, would deplete available capital funds, the report says. Under the "forward-funding" law, the MBTA no longer hands the state a bill for transit operating expenses at the end of the year. It is now funded through fares, assessments from local cities and towns, and 20 percent of state sales tax revenue.

The report recommends that state government assume financial responsibility for the planned $4.5 billion in expansion projects, including the $440 million Greenbush restoration, and states a concerted effort is needed to ensure coordination of highway and rail projects.

"If the Commonwealth wants to continue to expand the T – certainly a worthy goal – the state needs to fund those projects," the report said. "The T should focus its limited capital resources on the upkeep of the existing system while the Commonwealth assumes responsibility for expansion as part of a comprehensive, statewide transportation strategy."

"The T should focus its limited capital resources on the upkeep of the existing system."
— Mass. Taxpayers' Report

That recommendation drew heavy fire from Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, a member of the Transportation Committee, who has long contended that the MBTA can't afford to build the $440 million Greenbush commuter rail line. The construction contract for Greenbush was awarded earlier this month by the MBTA to a Cashman/Balfour Beatty joint venture.

"This report flies in the face of the whole forward funding concept. To basically discard forward funding two years in is wholly irresponsible," he said. "And if we [the Legislature] were party to this, we would be just as fiscally irresponsible."

MTF President Michael Widmer disagreed. He said forward funding was designed to place the MBTA on "sound fiscal footing while providing improved services," and that it would not be a violation of the spirit of the law for the state to pick up the tab for expansion as part of a comprehensive transportation plan.

About $3 billion in T expansion, including Greenbush, is required as environmental mitigation for the Big Dig project. John Carlisle, spokesman for the Executive Office of Transportation and Construction. Transportation, called the inclusion of Greenbush with the $4.5 billion in upcoming expansion projects a "red herring" because the project's $242 million construction price tag is already included in its capital spending plan.

State Rep. Joseph Sullivan, D-Braintree, who is co-chairman of the Transportation Committee, also said he was confident the MBTA has the money to pay for Greenbush construction, and that it will be viewed as a "model" of how to further expand under forward funding. The MBTA is also partly hamstrung, according to the report, by a budget where more than two-thirds of is taken up by personnel and debt service, leaving little, comparatively for capital spending.

The MBTA expects to collect $1.1 billion in revenue in fiscal year 2002. The report says if the MBTA spends $350 million a year in maintenance, as called for in its recently-approved five-year capital spending plan, and $200 million annually for the four years following, it would have only $600 million available for expansion projects between now and 2011. And at that spending level, the amount of deferred projects would grow from $3 billion to $4 billion.

Despite acknowledging the large amount of projects waiting for funding, the MBTA says its five-year capital spending plan contains enough money to adequately maintain state rail service.

Town rail bed transfer may need Legislature's OK

did not have the opportunity to buy the right-of-way. Passenger service on the line ended in 1959.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, a Greenbush opponent, said the issue could "turn on a dime."

"AfTA is taking the existing statute and saying the MBTA interpreted this wrong," he said. Bradley said he thinks AfTA's case has merit and explained the reason behind Article 97 (of the state constitution) is to prevent over development of public land.

Both Bewick and Bradley agree that getting enough legislators to vote against the land transfer should it be put to a vote would be problematic in the House where Rep. Joseph Sullivan, D-Braintree, a Greenbush advocate, heads the Transportation Committee.

"It would be difficult to get the votes in the House," Bradley said. "But I would certainly call every legislator and ask them to vote against it."

However, the Senate where state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, a Greenbush opponent, has served for five terms, could be a different story.

Hedlund said while a court will decide whether the "blanket authorization" in the bond bill can substitute for a two-thirds roll call vote — the North Scituate tennis courts, which the MBTA plans to take as part of the project, are clearly outside any description in that bill.

Hedlund said a budget amendment he filed last year that would have forced the MBTA to adhere to the same cost benefit analysis for the $440 million Greenbush project that it uses for other projects got 14 votes. The votes weren't enough to pass the amendment but demonstrate Greenbush vulnerability in the senate. Those 14 votes could also keep a land transfer getting the 2/3 majority, he pointed out.

When it comes to keeping the abandoned rail bed for conservation use, Hedlund is all for it.

"I road my bike from Cohasset center along the right-of-way to the Driftway in Scituate," he said. "It would make the most amazing bike path."

The Town of Hingham, which alleged the MBTA was paying for Greenbush with state dollars to avoid tougher federal environmental standards, settled its lawsuit in May of 2000 as part of an agreement that includes a $40 million tunnel under Hingham Square.

Proposed new by-law would protect ledge

Issue back before Town Meeting

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

If ledge preservationists have their way, then property owners must make an appearance before the Zoning Board of Appeals before hacking away at any large outcroppings on their land.

This time with the blessing of the Planning Board, a ledge article will be before voters at the March 30 annual Town Meeting.

Unlike its predecessor at the fall Special Town Meeting, the proposed by-law amendment would require a special permit, as opposed to a variance, from the Zoning Board before ledge a minimum of eight feet in height could be altered.

The article also defines "ledge" in clearer terms and provides a list of exemptions including municipal projects such as, sidewalks and sewer pipes.

The Planning Board had promised to revisit the issue if presented in a timely fashion.

"Last fall I promised the ledge preservation group that given enough time, we'd put a solid article on the town warrant," said Planning Board Chairman Al Moore. "I think we've done that."

Lynn DeGiacomo, 59 Beach St., one of the proponents, said the idea for a by-law protecting ledge came out of concern that the unfettered destruction of ledge would ruin the town's character. She noted that the article does not restrict the removal of all ledge.

The article also defines "ledge" in clearer terms and provides a list of exemptions including sidewalks.

"The definition of ledge was given a lot of thought," she said. "We even consulted two geologists."

How to determine the height of ledge was also given much consideration.

Although Bob Egan, the town's building inspector, says the new article is an improvement, he still has some reservations.

"In some cases, projects will be proposed and someone is going to have make a tough decision," he said.

However Egan, and others, were pleased that the proposed by-law requires a special permit rather than a variance, which is harder to obtain.

The Zoning Board would have to find that altering ledge would be "substantially detrimental" to the character of the area to deny a special permit. The intent there being to protect the town's more prominent ledge.

The unanimous Planning Board decision came after a lengthy discussion in which the wording of the article was tossed around.

Planning Board member Bill Good praised the newly formed Zoning Advisory Committee that reviewed the article.

"The ZAC has had a while to look at this article and I think they've done a good job with it," he said. "I think they should be commended."

Planning Board member Peter Pratt said he was pleased the board was able to offer a unanimous decision.

"I'm thrilled with all the hard work that's gone into this," he said. "I think it's great that were all on the same page."

The article will require a 2/3 majority to pass at Town Meeting because it involves a zoning by-law change.

Taxes, character concern survey respondents

tant to many residents," said Rick Swanborg, chairman of the Growth and Development Committee and author of the survey. "People really view Cohasset as a town they want to stay and retire in and not just raise kids and leave."

More than 90 percent of respondents to the eight-page survey agreed, or strongly agreed, that maintaining the town's character should be the focus of the future. Seven of the top ten issues regarding what Cohasset should do in the future were focused on protecting the water, views, access, open space and wildlife.

Swanborg said he designed the survey in a way to get residents to answer questions that the Master Plan will address. The survey was tested at several neighborhood forums before hitting the streets last year.

"This is one source of input we will use in writing the plan," Swanborg said. "It will not be seen as an all-knowing instrument that will guide the entire process."

The Growth and Development Committee was formed approximately two and a half years ago to help draft a town vision that comprehensively examines a broad range of issues. A master plan has a number of specific components to address including a goals and policy statement, land-use analysis, housing market analysis, economic development, natural and cultural resources, open space and recreation, service and facilities, and traffic/circulation/transportation.

"We're hoping that this plan will guide the decision making in town for 10 years," Harrington said.

She added the committee recently distributed the results of the survey to about 150 people who responded to the survey or participated in the public forums. The goal is to have as many people as possible read the results of the survey and comment on it.

"We'd really like to get a dialogue going," Harrington said.

Along with garnering input from the community, the Growth and Development Committee has hired a consulting group to help with analysis and the synthesis of the data.

Larissa Brown, from Community Design Partnership, said she would be working with the group in an effort to decide what is best for Cohasset.

"We want to look at all the options and all the consequences," Brown said. "We're going to develop working groups and visit with various boards and commissions around town to make sure all concerns are addressed."

Bill Good, a member of both the Planning Board and the Growth and Development Committee, said this is a very exciting point in the process. He said in the next four weeks before Town Meeting the group would share the results of the survey around town and hopes to have a presentation ready for Town Meeting on March 30.

"I guess the biggest message right now is that we want to hear from you," Good said.

For the Growth & Development Committee report on the survey, see page 7.

store is a friendly place and we have a lot of fun here," Detwiler said. She added the store has kept a scrapbook of every year of its existence documenting its various events.

Eileen Hanning, the WNBA Pannell chairman, said getting children excited about reading can be difficult.

"It's hard to get children involved so you really have to make a commitment," she said. "It takes a special person and store to understand what motivates kids to read and develop that interest."

The Pannell Award in named for Lucile Micheels Pannell whom Hanning describes as a model "bookwoman" and children's bookseller who owned a store in Chicago. In 1983, her family created an award to honor her achievements in bringing books to children.

Detwiler said one of the ways the store tries unite reading and children is to provide a constant opportunity for children to meet authors and illustrators. She added there is so much competition now with video games, television and movies that making children see that reading is enjoyable and satisfying, can be difficult. But that doesn't stop the store from trying.

Buttonwood, which has been open for 13 years, has worked in some capacity with at least 12 elementary schools, several middle schools and a number of private schools providing book fairs, reading books for Read Across America and other similar programs, and holding Teacher Appreciation Days.

Detwiler said she is especially proud of the Young Adult Nights, which is an effort to keep upper elementary and middle school students connected to reading. The store has formed an alliance with the Hingham Public Library in order to broaden the program. While Buttonwood finds the author and does the planning, the library provides a space and helps ensure large audiences.

"I think reading is so wonderful that I want kids to share in my joy and passion," Detwiler said. "There's a perfect book for every child and the challenge is to find it."

Detwiler, who taught for nine years in the learning disabilities program at the South Elementary School in Hingham before teaching English at Thayer Academy in Braintree, said she opened the store because she wanted more freedom and control over her life.

"When we first started I didn't have a strong idea of community service," she said. "But now that's all changed, it's our mission."

Buttonwood has often entertained children's authors who have national reputations, but Detwiler said she is equally proud of all the store has done to support local authors.

"There are wonderfully talented authors and illustrators in our midst who are not as well known but who have provide us with delightful appearances," Detwiler wrote in the portfolio she comprised for the judges.

Buttonwood Books and Toys, has been open in Cohasset since 1989 and in 1993, Detwiler opened a store in Hingham. The store is named for a Buttonwood tree in the backyard of Detwiler's house in Norwell.

Spending proposals sought

"Part of our job is studying the needs of the town." he said. "We plan to consult with town boards and conduct public hearings."

Ivimey explained the committee doesn't want all the money to go to groups with the most savvy that can pack a room.

"We want to push things out in the public eye and avoid the situation where people don't know if the committee exists," he said.

To that end, subcommittees within the committee are charged with ferreting out ideas from groups and boards. Ivimey explained the fund cannot pay for maintenance, but can pay for capital improvements and the money cannot be used to pay off an existing obligation. In other words, if a project is already bonded the fund cannot take over the bond.

At its March 4 meeting, the committee plans to:

- Invite public input on the proposals before it
- Solicit public input on other projects that might be out there
- Vote on the three pending funding requests

Cohasset adopted the CPA at last year's Town Election with a vote of 998-756. The surcharge must remain in effect for five years. State matching funds come from filing fees at the Registry of Deeds and land filings at Land Court.

Cohasset is one of 36 communities that have adopted the CPA so far. Other South Shore towns include Hingham, Marshfield and Duxbury. Scituate has the CPA on the ballot this spring. Towns that opt into the program early expect to receive 100 percent matching funds from the state because there is more money in the pot.

Cultural grants are available

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund and Rep. Garrett J. Bradley announced the guidelines for the Massachusetts Cultural Council's Endowment Grant Program for Cultural Organizations are now available on the Massachusetts Cultural Council's (MCC) Web site at:

www.massculturalcouncil.org /endowment.html

Applicants seeking FY 02 funding must submit draft applications by March 27, and final proposals are due April 29.

The Endowment Grant Program combines grants and technical assistance to organizations considering the creation or expansion of endowments. Applicants are required to demonstrate a track record of financial stability, a strong capacity for fundraising, adequate financial resources to deal with cyclical cash flow needs and sufficient resources to carry out their programs and maintain their faciiities.

Grants in this program are highly competitive and a list of previously funded applicants is available online at:

Unbeaten C.H.S. hockey team begins state tourney run Tuesday

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The next game Dennis Walsh loses as coach will be his last.

But the longtime Cohasset High hockey coach insists that's not even registering on his radar.

"As far as I'm concerned, my last game was last week (regular-season finale versus Avon-Holbrook)," said Walsh, who first started as an assistant with the Cohasset team in 1969, and has been the team's head coach for nearly 30 years. "We finished with an unbeaten season. That's quite a way to go out. The rest of this is dessert."

Of course, this is not to say that Walsh does not want to stuff himself to the busting point with after-dinner goodies.

"Oh, I'd be disappointed if we didn't make this last at least a little while longer," said Walsh with a smile. "I think I've got a team capable of doing some real nice things in the tourney, and I'd be disappointed for them if they didn't capitalize on that."

The Skippers enter the Div. 3 South Sectionals as the number one seed in a 14-team bracket, a reward for the first-ever unbeaten season for the program (19-0-1). The boys in blue and white get a first-round bye, so they won't hit the ice again for real until Tuesday versus the winner of Saturday's showdown between eighth-seed Bishop Feehan (12-8-1) and ninth-seed Avon-Holbrook (9-7-2).

Guess where the Cohasset hockey coaching staff is going to be Saturday? If you have to guess, you don't know Walsh very well. He and his assistants will naturally be at Brockton's Asiaf Rink to scout their first-round opponent.

It seems fair to say Walsh already has a pretty good book on Avon-Holbrook, the team his Skippers took down in the regular season finale, 9-0.

The Skippers poured it on early, allowing Walsh to begin

Gymnastics squad takes 6th at Sectionals

Team done, but Sheerin and Bixby prep for All-States

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Momentum can be a huge factor when it comes to the success of a team, and the extremely talented Cohasset-Norwell squad should have plenty of it when the All-State competition rolls around on March 10.

Coh-Nor finished the season with an outstanding 11-1 record, losing only to South Sectional power Marshfield. The Skipper-Clippers maintained a perfect 6-0 in league to capture the SSL for the first time as a combined team.

"By far, this has been the best team both Cohasset and, Norwell has had," lauded second year captain Kristin Sheerin, who is no stranger to success, making the SSL All-Star team an unprecedented six times. "We have some amazing young talent."

"By far, this has been the best team both Cohasset and Norwell has had. We have some amazing young talent."
Graduating Cohasset gymnastics team star Kristin Sheerin

This marked the first time since 1995 that Cohasset has been titled South Shore League Champs, and it has been a 10 year wait for the Clippers. Every athlete seems to agree that much of the success has stemmed from the closeness of all the teammates, regardless of the fact that it combines two towns.

"You would never know who was from Cohasset and who was from Norwell," mentioned C-N coach Cara Connerty, a Norwell High alum.

Leading the team all year were the senior captains Sheerin and Carlie Carter, both of whom captained a strong C-N team last year. Although Carter missed the entire season recovering from knee surgery, the tandem worked well to unite a very inexperienced team.

"Their leadership and maturity level, it made a huge difference," said Connerty.

Because the squad won the South Shore League, they received an automatic birth into the South Sectionals as a team. In what is considered to be by far the most challenging Sectional bracket, C-N performed quite well en route to a very solid sixth place finish.

Defending state champion Barnstable surprised no one by finishing first in the South Sectional, with King Philips taking the second spot, both earning a trip to States as a team. Also from the South, Attleboro made it to States as a wildcard because of their high average score.

New league should mean new start for swimmers

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

This year, the Cohasset High administration has made an effort to drop nearly all of its sports teams from Div. 3 to Div. 4 for post-season play. The teams would maintain their league affiliations and still play basically the same regular season schedule, but then they'd get the opportunity to play teams from schools closer in size to C.H.S. once the state tourneys begins.

Considering how few swim teams there are around, re-alignments are a little tricky when it comes to the joint Scituate-Cohasset High program, but the powers that be at the two schools still appear on the way to managing a deal that will pit the team against more reasonable competition next winter.

The Sci-Coh swim team held its own this year in the fiercely competitive Pilgrim Conference against the Aqua-Juggernauts of Eastern Mass. However, the general consensus for next year seems to be that once the joint school program goes head-to-head with comparable sized foes, the team's record should be quite different from this year's 3-7.

"I am so excited for next year, I wish it could start next week," said second year coach Jamie Kearney, the driving force behind the Sci-Cohs upcoming switch to the Bay Colony League. "These kids really deserve to show what they can do."

Rather than facing the superpowers like Duxbury, Nauset, and Taunton, Sci-Cohs will be swimming alongside smaller schools such as Oliver-Ames and Dover-Sherborn. The Sci-Cohs lost a remarkably close meet to Oliver-Ames this year, a meet the Sailors-Skippers would likely have won had they been at full-strength.

"Having two relatively equal teams just makes it more fun for everyone, if nothing else," asserted Kearney, who, like her team, admits to not enjoying one-sided meets against teams that have upwards of 60 males.

Athough the league move is not official yet, the campaign process has become easier than one might think. Pilgrim Conference organizers already believe teams in the Conference should be boys only, which the Sci-Cohs are not.

In addition, the athletic director and swim coach of Oliver-Ames has told Kearney he would like the Sci-Cohs to enter the Bay Colony, giving the Sci-Cohs a leg-up in the Cohasset laxers are 'Top Guns'

After winning their second "Junior Divisional Championship" since September of 2001 for the Plymouth Top Gun Indoor Box Lacrosse League, the very talented and hard playing Junior Cohasset Lax players were asked to participate in the "Tournament of Champions", sponsored by Top Gun Lacrosse for it's four leagues North and South of Boston.

The tournament took place on Monday, Feb. 18 (President's Day) and was an all day event, with teams in three different divisions competing in round-robin, playoff, and championship competition.

Cohasset easily won it's first two games in the morning by showing it's usual display of offensive depth and overall hustle. As the playing time began to accumulate, however, so did the injuries and fatigue. By the time the playoffs came around, Cohasset had four of it's 10 players ailing with typical Lacrosse-type injuries. Not a single player wanted out, though, and everyone did their part.

The first playoff contest, which was the third game of the day against Arlington, was Cohasset's best game of the day,

Skater Hughes an inspiration

FROM THE SIDELINES

JULIE ANN NEVERO

For decades, aspiring young skaters have trained at their local ice arenas with dreams of becoming the next big name in figure skating.

In the 1960's, it was Peggy Fleming. In the 1970's, it was Dorothy Hamill. In the 1980's, it was Katerina Witt. And in the 1990's, it was Kristi Yamaguchi, Nancy Kerrigan, Tara Lipinski, and Michelle Kwan. Every four years at the Winter Olympic Games, a new ice queen inspires millions of young skaters to dream the impossible dream.

There's no question that in recent years Kwan has indeed been the main object of affection in the ladies figure skating world, not just for those young girls on the ice, but for the entire nation as well. Her dominance over the years has produced four World Championships and six National titles, but never the one thing she's always wanted: An Olympic gold medal.

Kwan won the silver at 1998 Games in Nagano finishing behind 15-year-old phenom and fellow United States teammate Tara Lapinski. But this year was to be her year. Or so we all thought.

With her sixth national title under her belt, Kwan entered the 2002 Winter Olympic Games in Salt Lake City, Utah as the clear favorite to win the gold. And after skating a near-perfect short program that gave her an early lead over the highly talented field, many believed the gold medal was just a four and a half minute long program away.

But somebody forgot to tell that to Sarah Hughes. The 16-year-old skater shocked the world—and herself—in what will certainly go down as the biggest upset in ladies Olympic figure skating history by winning the long program and the gold medal.

Hughes—who finished third at the Nationals behind Kwan and fellow US Olympian Sasha Cohen—was in fourth place after the short program, but a technically and artistically superior long program catapulted her to the top spot when five of the nine judges awarded her the first placement. She was the only one of the four medal contenders to skate a flawless program. Kwan, who made two fatal errors, finished third behind silver medalist Irina Slutskaya of Russia. Cohen had to settle for fourth.

While an Olympic medal was certainly not out of her reach, nobody believed Hughes was capable of winning the gold. Standing on the ice at the Salt Lake Ice Arena with her arms raised and her eyes teary, it appeared even Hughes herself did not believe she was capable of what she had just done.

Perhaps what's more impressive than Hughes' spectacular performance—in which she landed two triple-triple combinations, the only lady to do so—is how gracious the teenager accepted the title of Olympic champion.

"I didn't want to skate for a gold medal," she told reporters after her win. "I went out and had a great time. I said, "This is the Olympics. I want to do the best I can."

She certainly did, both on and off the ice.

Hughes' bubbly, overjoyed response to winning the gold is exactly what those who watch these Games love, and quite frankly, expect to see. Collapsing into the arms of her ecstatic coach Robin Wagner in the locker room of the arena after the decision was announced, Hughes demonstrated the type of emotion US fans were starving for.

It was indeed the best thing to have come out of the Olympics, in light of the controversy and complaining that had previously dominated newsprint and airwaves at this year's Games.

Not since the "Tonya and Nancy" fiasco in 1994 has there been so much hoopla involved in a Winter Olympics.

Pairs skating judges making backroom deals, FBI investigations into threatening e-mails sent to US speedskating medalist Apolo Anton Ohno, and Russia's and South Korea's threats to pull out of not just the remainder of these games but also the 2004 Olympic Summer Games, to be held in Athens, Greece, because of alleged unfair treatment.

Come on.

There are far more important—and positive—things that occurred in Salt Lake, as demonstrated by Hughes, and one can only hope that it is these memories that people will look back on.

Things like the United States having its best-ever finish in a Winter Games, racking up a total 34 medals (10 gold), just one behind leader Germany and an impressive 21 more than its previous high mark of 13 in 1998 and 1994.

How about American Jim Shea winning a gold medal in the men's skeleton 70 years after his late grandfather, Jack, became the first double gold medalist in the Winter Olympics. Clutching Jack's funeral card in hand, Shea looked skyward after his win, dedicating it to the grandfather he lost in a car accident last month. Jack Shea won two speedskating events at the 1932 Lake Placid Games. He was the oldest living Olympian.

Let's also not forget the diversity of this year's US medal winners. Gold medal-winning bobsleder Vonetta Flowers was the first African-American athlete to medal in a Winter Games. Two-time bronze medal-winning speedskater Jennifer Rodriguez became the first Cuban-American athlete to medal. Ohno—who won gold and silver medals—was the first Japanese-American to receive a Winter Olympic prize.

These things are what make the Olympics the Olympics. Countries putting aside their political differences to compete against each other in good faith, the stories of each athlete and what it took him/her to get there, and the history they make along the way.

Finger-pointing, poor sports don't deserve to be remembered. Remember the good things. Winning medals is nice, but fairness, good sportsmanship, and the simple joy of competing among the best the world has to offer is what's really important about the Olympics.

Hughes clearly understood this, and she's only 16. There's your inspiration.

emptying his bench before the midway point.

Cohasset's only multiple scorer in the game was Greg O'Connell. The junior tallied twice to wrap up his season with a South Shore League best 59 points, five ahead of surging Norwell forward Rob Himberg (54 points), who compiled 10 points in his final two games.

O'Connell's right wing, John Durkin, also scored and added a few assists to bring his SSL third best totals to 36 points, while frosh defenseman Joe Durkin (John's cousin) joined the scoring parade with his first-ever varsity tally.

Cohasset goalie Dan Kinchla recorded his 10th shutout of the season. The senior surrendered just 18 goals on the season, giving him an uncanny 0.90 goals against average for the season, an SSL best by nearly 1.5 goals per game.

With the 9-0 whitewashing, the Skippers finished the season with 151 goals, shattering the old school record. In point of fact, the Skippers topped that mark near the mid-season point.

As the numbers indicate, the Skippers have been pretty much a two-way hockey machine this season. Walsh throws out three hard skating lines — led by the scintillating trio of O'Connell, Durkin and Rob Carpenter (28 points — and five talented defensemen, including All-Star team no-brainers Tim Straughn (23 points) and Eric Libby.

"The key to our success is our skating," said Walsh. "I don't think there's any secret to that. We've shown that there aren't too many teams that can stay with us when we're skating well. We'll go as far as the legs will carry us."

With 12 days between real game action, Walsh arranged a couple of scrimmages against higher division tourney bound team. The Skippers took on Div. 2 Marshfield (14-5-3) Friday, and hosted Div. 1 Silver Lake (9-8-5) yesterday. Walsh is also trying to arrange a game for this weekend, but notes that might be tough with most teams playing their first games Saturday.

"The kids are skating well in practice, but there's no substitute for game action," said Walsh. "Of course, the tourney will be at another level, but this is the best we can do right now."

Hockey notes

The Cohasset team was honored this week as co-winners of the South Shore League "Sportsmanship Award," sharing the recognition with last-place Mashpee. This tribute from league coaches was no doubt largely in deference to all the games in which Cohasset "eased up" once the matter was decided.

Quite honestly, the Skippers could have easily topped the 200-goal mark this season if they'd kept shooting against the likes of Mashpee, Hull and a few others.

as it's defense was superb and the team mounted a 12-3 advantage before going to a conservative game strategy to save their legs . The final score was Cohasset 15, Arlington 9.

The second playoff game was against a well coached and explosive Plymouth team that Cohasset had met on more than one occasion. Each contest had been a battle and the teams seemed well matched. Once again, Cohasset emerged on top and as a result won a spot in the final Championship game against Arlington, who earned their right to the final game by getting by Plymouth 4-3 in overtime for an exciting qualification.

The Championship game was hard fought from beginning to end, but Cohasset went up early and never looked back. Whenever a "hot stick" was covered, another appeared. So, despite their injuries and exhaustion from the long day, the Cohasset Junior Division champs won it all and are this years Champions of Champions for Top Gun.

In the Bay Colony League, the swimmers of Scituate and Cohasset will indeed finally be able to "show what they can do." All too often this year, team members were dropping times, but it went for nothing as they would lend up losing to the top swimmers from the top programs.

"Bryan Bilton took six seconds off his 100 free, David Ingber took five seconds off his 100 breastroke, and Kathryn Noonan took seven seconds off her 100 backstroke," lauded the coach, naming only a few of the great improvements in the past three months. "These are phenomenal successes. Next year, these successes will translate into firsts, instead of seconds and thirds."

Playing a more balanced schedule is only part of the reason for the strong sense of optimism headign into the 2002-'03 campaign. Also lending mightily to the rosy outlook is the fact the team loses just four seniors to graduation, and gains back all four females that the team sent to Sectionals this year.

At Sectionals, Noonan, a junior at Scituate, had the best finish of the day for her team, taking ninth in the backstroke. Scituate freshman Danielle Swain took 12th and 15th in her two freestyle events. The Sci-Coh relay teams also outperformed their expectations, finishing seven places higher than they were seeded.

"Success is not going to come easily, especially not for a team our size," reminded Kearney. "We still have a lot of hard work ahead."

The team proved it can handle the work though. Last year, the team's most exerting practices never topped 2,700 yards. This season, conversely, more than a few maxed out at 4,000 yards.

"That one meet we had against Oliver Ames said a lot," noted Kearney of the 87-80 loss, when the Sci-Cohs only had nine athletes present. "With an entire season against teams like that, there is no telling what this teamwill be able to accomplish."

Although the Skipper-Clippers did not qualify to make states as a team, Cohasset's own Sheerin and junior Meredith Bixby will compete as individuals.

Bixby, selected a league All-Star for the third year in a row, has a very good shot at placing in the vault, her best event this year. The junior has improved in all four events this year, breaking all her personal records.

Sheerin has a very good shot at doing what no other gymnast from Cohasset or Norwell has done since 1992: finish top ten at States and get named to the Senior Nationals team. Should that happen, Sheerin earns a free trip to Las Vegas, where all the Massachusetts selectees would compete against all other states. Massachusetts won this competition last year.

Interestingly enough, the last Cohasset or Norwell athlete to go to Nationals as a senior was Sheerin's coach, Cara Connerty.

"Hopefully, with my performance at Sectionals last week and a strong meet at States, I will be in the running," offered Sheerin, who took second individually at South Sectionals with a 35.55 All-Around score. "But I couldn't have asked for a better team, or career."

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Second-graders learn about Wampanoag life

By Michael Scott Astley
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

It is the mark of a good teaching plan to create within students a real desire to learn. It is, however, the mark of a great teaching plan to imbue students with an empathetic and faithful understanding of that which they learn. To dissect and investigate any given subject is a proven strategy for gaining knowledge. Many adults tend to analyze subjects with a cautious and judgmental eye. Fortunately, however, children are more often likely to view subjects with creative and ingenious sensitivity. When the second-grade students at the Osgood School recently studied about the Wampanoag People, their individual explorations became virtual journeys into the fertile historical past.

These Native Americans shared a healthy symbiotic relationship with this environment rich in natural resources.

The children read books, not just with superficial interest, but also with depth of insight and abstract curiosity about a civilization far different than their own. They participated in animated discussions, posing thoughtful questions and contributing wise observations. Their inquisitive research turned to intense hands-on exploration. They designed creative projects focusing on artistic methods of collecting information. The children gathered material for their study just as the Wampanoags gathered edible nuts and berries — with fervent determination and inventive purpose.

The Wampanoag People lived in the woodlands of the northeastern United States. The Native American word, "Wampanoag" meaning "people of the dawn" or "people of the first light," was a name well chosen for its descriptive illustration of their soulful and literal connection with nature. These Native Americans shared a healthy symbiotic relationship with this environment rich in natural resources.

A diorama of a Wampanoag village made by second-graders at Osgood.

They lived on lands abundant in forests, open fields, and waters. Those lands afforded them numerous animals, birds, fish, and reptiles. The Wampanoags also planted and harvested food. They ate these creatures and the bounty from their gathering. The Wampanoags used the creatures, wood and bark from the trees, stones, shells, nuts, berries, grasses, and other resources to make necessities such as clothing, dishes, tools, and shelter. They also made expressive jewelry, artworks, and other decorations indicative of a well- developed way of life.

The Wampanoags moved with the variable seasons. In the summer, they constructed their villages near the coast. They made great use of the ocean's nourishing abundance. During winter, they moved inland to take advantage of somewhat milder weather and protective landscape. This semi-nomadic design of the Wampanoag villages reflected the varied physical environments necessary for the survival and well being of these People of the First Light.

Family was a central element of the Wampanoag culture. The family members would share the various planting and gathering responsibilities. The men and boys were the primary hunters of game. The women and girls were the household workers, tending the fields and servicing the needs of the wetu. The wetu was both the physical and symbolic family home. It was an ingenious structure built of a bent wood framework covered with cattail mats or bark sections. The wetu housed numerous objects including pots and baskets, eating utensils, stone tools and weapons, toys and games, smoking pipes and tobacco, sewing materials, and fire making items. The Wampanoags shared precious shelter, but also daily work and recreation with one another in the family wetu.

The students came to understand and treasure the Wampanoag People with their skillful and proud history. They actually placed themselves in the various roles held by these Native American People, unearthing evidence that the Wampanoags were accomplished friends of nature, using their cunning and ingenuity to carve a successful living from raw materials born of the elements. The children empathized with a Nation of People who ate, drank, sought shelter, and designed a culture in harmonious concert with the great world enveloping them. They were a People with a highly developed and diverse civilization. This, the students discovered and absorbed with relish.

Unfortunately, it is all too easy to become dismissive of the scope of a child's unadulterated wonderment and the singular importance of his or her intellectual experiences. With this great teaching plan and the accompanying resourcefulness of each child, the product of this study of the Wampanoag People encompassed a series of writings, Wampanoag character development projects, and the construction of a detailed Wampanoag village diorama using clay, papier mâché, and natural found objects. To the surprise of those adults who merely study facts in order to learn, these second graders proved that they could imagine themselves back into the historical past. In that far away place, they actually lived vicariously through the eventful lives of the Wampanoag Native American People.

Proud Wampanoag People continue to live in New England. Many of them continue practicing the rich tradition of their ancestors.

Selectmen make Jackson's appointment as chief official

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The Cohasset selectmen never felt so protected.

Half a dozen officers, a few detectives, and Norwell Police Chief Robert Galvin, attended the meeting Tuesday to see selectmen ratify Sgt. Robert Jackson's appointment as the new police chief. The law enforcement officers wanted to show their support for the new chief.

"I want to thank the town, my brother officers and the board for their support," Jackson said. "I'm going to do a good job and make them proud."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said it was the first time he has appointed a police chief in his career and he couldn't imagine a better process. Under the Town Manager Act, Haddad has the authority to appoint the police chief, and selectmen either ratify or veto that decision.

"I want to thank all the people that donated countless hours to make sure we found the right guy," he said. "We have found an outstanding chief of police." Haddad singled out a few people but repeatedly thanked Chief Galvin, who has no real vested interest in the town, for his help in the process.

"I'm going to do a good job and make them proud."
— Sgt. Bob Jackson

Selectman Ronnie McMorris, a member of the police search committee along with Galvin and several others, said the committee looked at a plethora of qualified candidates but Jackson rose to the top.

"It was a great process that allowed us to see the candidates interact with various people around town," she said. "The board should be happy to endorse Jackson."

After the board ratified the appointment, the room filled with applause as Jackson went up to each selectman and shook their hand, thanking them for their support.

"I'm looking forward to the challenges ahead," Jackson said. "I will do my best."

Haddad said he is in the process of negotiating a contract with Jackson and will have it complete by the time he is sworn in. Jackson's appointment is expected to take effect March 8, the day that current Police Chief Brian Noonan retires.

Jackson was selected after a lengthy search that narrowed down a list of more than 50 candidates to four. The four finalists were paraded around town and interviewed by various groups including representatives from the School Committee, department heads and the police union. Jackson was the only local finalist, the others hailed from Fitchburg, New Bedford and Westfield.

Teachers get new contract

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

If only the politicians on Beacon Hill could work so cooperatively.

Last week, the School Committee announced it has reached a three-year collective bargaining agreement with the teachers' union.

Supt. Edward Malvey said negotiations went very well and he was pleased with the new contract. Malvey highlighted a few issues while presenting the contract at the School Committee meeting.

The contract includes increases of 3, 3-1/2 and 3 percent over the next three years, not including step increases teachers receive for years on the job and for taking additional courses.

Under the current contract, a first-year teacher with a bachelor's degree, has a salary $30,479 in the 2001/2002 school year. Under the new contract, the salary of a first-year teacher in the 2004/2005 school year would be about $33,374.

The contract also includes an extra in-service day for teachers and a condition that the school year could start before labor day. The union will also have more say about when the school year begins and when professional days are scheduled.

"Our primary goal was to attract and retain young talented teachers."
— Ed Leonard, president of teachers' union

Ed Leonard, president of Cohasset's Teachers' Association and a guidance counselor, said there was a lot of give and take in the negotiations. The teachers' union and the School Committee partook in "interest-based" bargaining in which both sides looked at the issues and tried to come to a consensus rather than setting a bottom line. The two sides spent more than 50 hours in negotiations together which began in August.

"Our primary goal was to attract and retain young talented teachers," Leonard said.

Leonard added one thing the union wanted and wasn't able to get was a child-care program for teachers' children. He said many school systems have these centers in place and felt many teachers would benefit from it. However, overall he thought the contract was suitable.

"We're pleased with the contract," Leonard said. "We have a good relationship with the School Committee and Dr. Malvey and were able to accomplish a lot."

Town Manager Mark Haddad, who sat in on the negotiations, said the contract fits in with his proposed budget. He is very happy with the contract and felt both sides got a fair shake.

"There was give and take on both sides," he said. "I want to compliment both sides on their professionalism."

Mark DeGiacomo, who along with Pat Martin represented the school committee in negotiations, said he was pleased with the contract. He added there are now incentives in place for teachers to pursue their master's degree "sooner rather than later" which were not in the contract before.

Beechwood sidewalk before Town Meeting

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

A group of citizens from Beechwood Street, Norman Todd Road and Talarico Lane consider installing a sidewalk along the busy thoroughfare through their neighborhood to be a priority.

To that end, the residents submitted a Citizens Petition for the March 30 annual Town Meeting for $15,000 for a cost analysis for a sidewalk that would start at Beechwood and South Main streets, run down Beechwood, and continue up Norman Todd Road, meeting the existing sidewalk at 131 Beechwood St.

Bill Fusco, 8 Norman Todd Road, said the lack of a sidewalk on such a busy street should be a concern of everyone it town.

"This is a heavily traveled portion of town," Fusco said. "A sidewalk would benefit a lot of people."

Fusco said the issue is nothing new. Back in 1995, the sidewalk study committee reported to selectmen constructing a sidewalk on that stretch of Beechwood Street and Norman Todd Lane should top the list.

"Many people walk along Beechwood Street to the village and without a sidewalk it can be quite dangerous," he said.

While selectmen agree there is a need for a sidewalk, they say it may not be necessary to ask Town Meeting for the design money.

"This is a heavily traveled portion of town."
— Bill Fusco, 8 Norman Todd Road

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the Norfolk County Engineers would do the design drawings for free. However, he warned those plans could take anywhere from one to three years to complete.

Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed said even if the sidewalk article wins Town Meeting approval, it could be years before the town has enough money to fund the construction project. With state reimbursement for the school building projects delayed, prioritizing projects has become even more important.

"If we're going to be waiting a few years to do the construction, what does it hurt to just have the Norfolk County Engineers do it (design) for free?" he asked.

But Fusco said while he understood the town's financial situation, having the drawings completed earlier would expedite construction.

"That way we can begin construction as soon as the money becomes available rather than wait for the design drawings to be completed," he said.

Although Fusco and selectmen could not provide an estimate on the cost of the Beechwood sidewalk, they thought it would be less than the $190,000 Town Meeting appropriated to construct the Forest Avenue sidewalk that requires removing some ledge.

Selectmen recommended the article and the town will have a chance to vote on it at annual Town Meeting on March 30.

POLICE BRIEFS

Car break-ins

Police said there have been a rash of car break-ins lately and are encouraging motorists not to leave a pocketbook or purse in plain view, even inside a locked vehicle.

The thieves have used a device to open a locked door and then steal a couple of credits cards. They don't take the purse or the money so the owner often doesn't immediately notice anything is missing.

Then the perpetrators are going to Quincy and using the stolen credit cards at various stores, Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

There have been about 1/2 dozen similar incidents over the past three months, the most recent one at Fitness First off 3A.

Paint ball guns cause disturbance

Police confiscated six paint ball guns Saturday afternoon from youths using the guns behind the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. The parents were called down and given a copy of the law, Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

"Minors have to be accompanied by an adult and the guns cannot be used in a public place," he said.

Paint-ball guns have been determined to be the equivalent of air guns by the State Police Ballistics Lab. Therefore, it is illegal to sell a paint-ball gun to minor under the age of 18 and it is illegal for these guns to be discharged in public places unless the minor is accompanied by an adult.

Police can confiscate the guns being used in violation of state law, identify the violators and forward incident reports to the prosecutor for review.

Blowing their own horns

Norwell brass trio featured in Springsteen tribute band

By Gregory Mathis
GMATHIS@CNC.COM

They sound like Bruce and the lead singer even resembles him. But if you look closely enough, you might see a few familiar local faces that'll make you wonder if this really is "The Boss" and his famous E Street Band.

It's close, but Bruce Springsteen does not front the "B Street Band" and there is no Clarence Clemons, Steve Van Zandt, Danny Federici, Max Weinberg, Roy Bittan or Garry Tallant. In their place is New Jersey-area rockers Willie Forte, Glen Stuart, Bob Chipak, Steve Baranian, Dave Brown, John Colyer and Bob Clarke. While those names might not be familiar to you, you might recognize Norwell residents Pete Senatore, John Ewing and Paul Webber when their brass is added to the mix.

The Norwell trio, affectionately dubbed the "Viagra Horns" by Forte and his bandmates, will be polishing up their brass for a big show Friday night at the Hard Rock Café in Boston. The Springsteen tribute band will be making the trek from the Jersey Shore to Boston for a rare local appearance and the Norwell horns will get a chance to play in front of family and friends.

The Norwell connection to this Jersey-based group formed — appropriately enough — before a Springsteen concert in Philadelphia two years ago. Senatore went to the call window to pick up his tickets for a show at the First Union Center and said he heard Springsteen music in the distance. When he explored it further, he discovered it was not a CD or a tape, but a live band playing in the parking lot.

"They sounded great and they were having a lot of fun," Senatore said.

Senatore got the group's name and Web site address, where he learned the band could be hired for weddings and other special events, like birthday parties. Senatore thought he'd surprise Webber for his 40th birthday two years ago May and hired the B Street Band to come up to play at his surprise party.

"I told them he plays sax and asked if he could play with the band," Senatore recalled. "They said we were paying for it we could do whatever we wanted."

Senatore was told the band was looking for brass to play on "Tenth Avenue Freeze Out", especially trumpet. So he ditched his trombone, which Ewing plays, to take up trumpet.

"I had one month to learn trumpet and get my chops into shape," Senatore said, who had played trombone since junior high school.

Norwell residents Pete Senatore, Paul Webber and John Ewing known as the "Viagra horns" join the "B Street Band" — a Springsteen tribute act — for shows when their schedules permit.

When the big day came, the trio blew away the band members with their sound.

"They said 'you guys are great, why don't you come down and play with us," Senatore said.

Forte said the "Viagra Horns" made a great first impression on "Tenth Avenue Freeze Out" and the trio was invited to play during the band's 20th anniversary party two years ago at The Stone Pony in Asbury Park, New Jersey and has a standing invitation to join them whenever their schedule permits.

"They're a bunch of good guys," Forte said. "They're very colorful and bring a lot of personality to the stage."

While Senatore and Webber are diehard Springsteen fans, Ewing's musical background is more classical. He has played semi-professionally in brass quintets and has toiled with the Cape Cod Symphony, the Plymouth Philharmonic and the 21-piece brass band featured the last two years at the Norwell Men's Club Town Fair, the Bridgewater Antiphonal Brass Society.

Ewing, a National Account Representative for Wear Guard, said playing rock and roll is "a nice change."

"I was familiar with Springsteen's music, so it was an easy thing to slip into," Ewing said.

Ewing was also impressed with the quality of the B Street Band.

"The first time I heard this group I was impressed with the level of musicianship," Ewing said. "They are a cut above... an extraordinarily versatile group."

Senatore, a surgeon at South Shore Hospital out of South Shore Medical Center in Norwell, spends some of his free time at the computer, putting together arrangements for songs the trio can perform with the B Street Band. The list of tunes is growing and now includes classics such as "Having a Party," "The Fever," "Jungleland," "Born to Run," "Rosalita," "Ramrod," "Raise Your Hand," and he just finished putting together an arrangement for "My Hometown."

Forte said the horns will be featured on at least five or six songs Friday night during the Hard Rock Café performance.

Forte is excited about returning to the area.

"New England is really a favorite of mine," Forte said. "I like it up there, so I'm really excited about this show."

Forte, who said the group performed regularly at Brandeis College and Boston College in the late 1980s, early 90s, is hoping to build a following in the Boston area so the band can return to play on a more regular basis.

Friday night's concert at the Hard Rock Café begins at 10:15 p.m.

Hingham man produces documentary on Red Sox history

By Amy Lamblaso
CORRESPONDENT

Most Boston Red Sox fans remember Oct. 1, 1967 like it was yesterday. It was the game that defined the "impossible dream" season. Ken London was 13-years-old.

London, a Hingham resident, remembers watching television as star pitcher Jim Lonborg was carried off the field by thousands of fans. At the time, London could only dream about meeting this hometown hero.

"I don't remember scores. I remember the characters and the sub-plots that go along with the game."
— Ken London, documentary producer

But 34 years later, London sat next to Lonborg, now a dentist and Scituate resident, interviewing him as part of his nine-month research project for "The Boston Red Sox: 100 Years of Baseball History," the latest of London's documentaries on New England sports. The fifth film London has produced, "The Boston Red Sox" was released for sale in November, and has earned the title of top-selling sports' documentary in New England sports' history, selling about 65,000 copies since its debut.

"Ever since I was 13-years-old, I have always viewed sports as a drama, or a story," London recalled. "I don't remember scores. I remember the characters and the sub-plots that go along with the game."

It was this vision that landed London a job at Channel 38 in Boston when he was fresh out of graduate school at Boston University.

As producer/director for Boston Bruins Hockey with Channel 38, London thought he had reached the pinnacle of his career. While he grew up a fan of New England sports — living and experiencing the Bruins and the Red Sox through his 10 years at Channel 38, taught him the personal side of their story.

"I got to see people who I thought I knew in a whole different context," London said. "It made me see that these guys, these athletes, despite all the money they make have their own personal concerns, too."'

Getting to know these athletes in a different context was more than he could have imagined. As a kid, London went to sleep wearing a Derek Sanderson Bruins' jersey. Years later, Sanderson would serve as one of the announcers for the Bruins games London produced for Channel 38.

"It was truly great to work with one of my idols from when I was a kid, and to actually have him working for me as an announcer," London said. "It was a real unexpected twist."

London's first documentary surrounded the story of Roger Clemens returning to Houston to pitch in the 1986 Major League Baseball All-Star game. The film, "Roger Clemens: Home to the Dome," depicted not only Clemens the athlete, but how he was also a son, a brother, and a friend.

"I enjoy doing reports where you can get up close and personal with athletes," London said. "My experience with Roger Clemens taught me a lot about who these athletes really are. It's about more than just a game for them."

London has also produced films on Carl Yastrezemski, Ray Bourque, and a documentary on the most famous Red Sox home-run hitters. The opportunity to meet and form relationships with these Boston legends proves to be just as special each time, but producing the

Feeling good about yourself and your body

By Jennifer Bernhard Raby

You may not have known that the week of Feb. 24 to March 3 is Eating Disorders Awareness Week — a time to celebrate and accept the miraculous gift of your body no matter what size or shape you are. Unfortunately, most women of all ages do not have a positive self-image of their bodies or self worth.

Eating disorders affect five to 10 million Americans, and 70 million individuals worldwide. According to a recent study in Psychology Today, 62 percent of females ages 13 to 19 said they were dissatisfied with their weight; and 67 percent of women over 30 said they were unhappy with their weight. In fact, in a similar study, two out of five women (and 1 out of five men) would trade three to five years of their lives to achieve their "perceived ideal" bodyweight. These statistics are devastating.

It makes sense that in today's celebrity-focused, media sensationalized world, we are increasingly becoming a society obsessed with exterior features, body image and thinness. Just look at how our role models have changed over the last 50 years. Marylyn Monroe, the icon of fifties sexuality was 5'5 and 135 pounds. In fact, she compared relatively well with today's average American woman, who is 5'4 and 135 pounds. Unfortunately, Madison Avenue markets its clothing to the average woman using supermodels who are decidedly not average, weighing in at 117 pounds, with an average height of 5'11, or thinner and taller than 98 percent of American women. Likewise, today's icon of beauty, Britney Spears weighs in at 5'4 and 104 pounds and did I mention her abs! It's ironic that in a culture where obesity is higher than ever, our ultimate internalized idea of the "right" body type is taller and thinner than ever. We have become victims of the media's message that shakes our confidence and constantly instills in us a sense that we don't measure up.

It's ironic that in a culture where obesity is higher than ever, our ultimate internalized idea of the "right" body type is taller and thinner than ever. We have become victims of the media's message that shakes our confidence and constantly instills in us a sense that we don't measure up.

Men aren't immune to poor body image either, however studies have shown that in general they are more secure with their bodies, and do not have the constant social pressure to be thin that women do. In fact, most body image issues with men tend to be focused on gaining muscle mass, rather than an ingrained obsession with losing weight, although it is estimated that 1 percent of men do suffer from eating disorders including anorexia and bulimia.

We idolize women with very low levels of body fat. But the fact is we need a certain amount of body fat to stay fit and healthy. Body fat plays a crucial role in performing our daily physiology. It cushions our bones, and plays an important role in converting estrogen produced by the ovaries and adrenal glands into a usable form by our body. It helps to keep our skin, hair and nails healthy. If you don't have enough body fat due to excessive exercising, or by not eating, you can develop amenorrhea (loss of menstrual cycle) which ultimately can affect your ability to have children, as well as potentially accelerating the onset of osteoporosis. In fact, if today's mannequins used in marketing fashion to women were actually human, based on their theoretical body fat percentage, they would probably not be able to menstruate.

Many women unfortunately have so internalized the desire to have extremely low body fat and the idealized image of a beautiful body that they have developed serious eating disorders. What are the most common eating disorders? There are a few different types. The unifying factor between them all is that these are real mental and physiological diseases that run deeper than just feeling bad about your body. There are usually underlying psychological issues that need to be addressed such as low self-esteem and poor body image. These include:

Anorexia Nervosa: a disorder in which a preoccupation with dieting and thinness leads to excessive weight loss. The individual may not acknowledge that weight loss or restricted eating is a problem;

Bulimia Nervosa: involves frequent episodes of binge eating, almost always followed by purging and intense feeling of guilt;

Compulsive Eaters and Overweight Binge Eaters: experience uncontrolled eating, and secretive eating;

Exercise Bulimia: a disorder when someone uses exercise as a form of punishment rather than pleasure.

Many women may not fall into the category of being afflicted with an eating disorder, but do have "bad body fever" or "BBF". Some examples of BBF are a constant negative self assessment, cringing every time you look in

Bolognese Sauce revisited

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Bolognese is the classic Italian meat sauce that is made with beef, usually pork, milk, wine, vegetables, and two or three hours of stovetop simmering. It's hearty, deeply flavored, and silky but it is also enormously time consuming. Even worse, I discovered that some of these 3-hour recipes yielded sauces that were watery, beefy, or overpowered by bay leaves and oregano. I wanted something fast (no more than an hour), well-balanced, and rich without being heavy.

After testing five different recipes, I assembled my own working sauce, deciding to forego lengthy simmering for a quick 30-minute cooking time in a large saucepan. This worked well, producing a very good sauce in a fraction of the time.

Next, I went through the ingredient list, dumping celery but keeping onion, carrot, and two cloves of garlic. As for the meat, I found ground beef (this is usually round, not chuck) disappointing in both texture and flavor preferring, instead, coarsely ground chuck. This can be done by the butcher or in your food processor at home. The texture of the sauce is far superior when using coarsely ground meat and unlike finely ground beef, it doesn't clump together. A combination of 1 1/4 pounds of ground chuck and 1/2 pound ground pork produced a meaty sauce that was both sweet and rich.

As for the liquids, milk and wine are essential for a true Bolognese but I reduced the amount of wine to compensate for the short cooking time. Broth and/or water were disappointing since the sauce did not cook long enough to evaporate the extra liquid. Instead, I simply used a 28-ounce can of tomatoes. I also experimented with tomato paste and found adding 3 tablespoons to the sauce added body and intensity.

As for other ingredients, I settled on fresh thyme rather than oregano and bay leaves, the latter being overpowering. I did find that by adding 3 ounces of finely chopped pancetta with the aromatics and 1/3 cup hydrated porcini, the sauce becomes much more flavorful. (These are listed as optional ingredients, however, since they are not common pantry items.) The dish is best when garnished with chopped flat leaf Italian parsley, freshly ground black pepper, and freshly grated Parmesan cheese.

As for the cooking itself, I started by sautéing the onion, carrot, and garlic and then cooked the meat. I discovered the sauce made with lightly browned meat had slightly more flavor than one made with meat that hadn't been browned. (Beware of overcooking the meat – it takes on an unpleasant "browned beef" taste.) Next, I hoped that I could add all of the liquids at one time but the sauce turned out watery and dull-flavored. I prepared the sauce in a saucepan or pot large enough to hold the sauce and the pasta so they can be tossed together for the final stage of cooking. (If you don't have a skillet/pot large enough, simply toss them together in the pasta cooking pot.) Still, the circumference of the pot should be fairly large since this speeds cooking. This sauce is best when served with large tubular pasta where chunks of meat can lodge in the crevices.

QUICK BOLOGNESE SAUCE

I found grinding the beef, pork, and pancetta in a food processor to be a snap. They should all be ground separately and the large quantity of beef is most evenly ground in a few batches. The meat should be cut into about 1-inch cubes and very cold, you can even freeze it for about 30 minutes if you have time. This do-it-yourself method allows you to achieve a coarse grind that gives the sauce a very meaty quality. Otherwise, ask for coarsely ground chuck instead of the ground beef blends offered in packages in the meat case.

1/3 dried porcini mushrooms, optional
2 tablespoons unsalted butter
2 tablespoons olive oil
3 ounces pancetta coarsely ground in a food processor or finely chopped, optional
1 small onion, diced fine
1 small carrot, diced fine
2 cloves garlic, minced or pressed
1 1/4 pounds beef chuck, coarsely ground
1/2 pound pork, coarsely ground
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 cup whole milk
3/4 cup dry white wine
1 28 ounce can diced or crushed tomatoes packed in juice or whole tomatoes packed in juice and pulsed in a food processor
3 tablespoons tomato paste
2 sprigs fresh thyme
1 bay leaf
Freshly ground black pepper
1 pound pasta, tubular shape preferred
1/4 cup flat leaf Italian parsley, chopped fine
Freshly grated Parmesan cheese

1. Soak the optional porcini in 2/3-cup very hot water for 20 minutes. Remove from liquid and chop fine, reserving liquid. Heat 1 tablespoon butter and one tablespoon oil in a large heavy duty Dutch oven or saucepan over medium heat. Once the butter has stopped foaming add the optional pancetta. Cook until it has released some fat and become fragrant, about two minutes. Add the onion and carrot and cook until softened, about five minutes. Add the garlic and cook 2 minutes more. Remove vegetables from pan and set aside. If not using the optional pancetta simply add the onion and carrot once the butter has stopped foaming and proceed.

2. Place the remaining tablespoon each of butter and olive oil in the pan. Add the beef, pork, and salt to the pan and sauté until the meat begins to brown, about 10 minutes. Add the vegetables and optional porcini mushrooms to the pot. If using the porcini add the reserved mushroom liquid being careful not to add any grit that has settled at the bottom. Cook, stirring occasionally, until evaporated, about 2 minutes. Next, add the milk and cook, stirring occasionally, until most of the liquid is evaporated, about 8 to 10 minutes. Add the wine and again, stirring occasionally, cook until almost completely evaporated, about 8 minutes longer. Add the tomatoes and their juices, tomato paste, thyme and bay leaf. Adjust heat to maintain a brisk simmer. The sauce should have bubbles rising to the surface but not boiling. Cook for 30 to 40 minutes or until the sauce is dark red, thickened and the flavors have come together. Adjust for seasoning with salt and pepper.

3. Meanwhile bring a large pot of water to a boil. Add salt and pasta and cook to within two minutes of the package al dente directions. Drain the pasta and add it to the sauce. Toss the pasta and sauce together over low heat for two minutes or until the pasta is evenly mixed into the sauce and the sauce has started to coat the pasta. If your Dutch oven or saucepan is not large enough to hold the sauce and the pasta the two can be tossed together in the pasta cooking pot. Serve at once with a sprinkling of parsley, a few grinds of freshly ground black pepper and lots of freshly grated Parmesan cheese.

Serves four to six.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 27

The full moon culminates at 4:17 a.m., 8 1/2-degrees of Virgo/Pisces. However, the moon continues to form potentially difficult aspects to planets until 10:17 p.m., when it becomes inactive. Stress management is important. Sidestep doubts, worries, fears. Eat light foods and avoid stimulants. Spend extra time working out with exercise routines. Stay busy with work projects that need a finishing touch or reorganization.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 28

After the barrage of planetary activity this week, today's influences offer an opportunity to catch up, relax. The Virgo moon is inactive until 1:47 p.m., when it enters Libra. Plan to finish jobs already begun, handle routine chores and errands this morning. The green light goes on for new starts at 1:47 p.m., particularly in your personal life. This is a wonderful time for meeting people, making contacts, establishing new relationships. Plan a romantic evening with the love in your life.

FRIDAY, MARCH 1, 2002

Fair and sunny astrological weather prevails on this first day of March. The giant planet Jupiter, representing luck and opportunity, turns direct at 10:13 a.m., 6-degrees of the sign Cancer. In addition, the Libra moon forms harmonious contacts to Mercury and Pluto. You can start new activities at 10:05 a.m., when Mars enters Taurus. Go for the gold today. It is one of the best for new beginnings in your personal or professional life.

SATURDAY, MARCH 2

At 6:57 a.m. the Libra moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive until 1:51 p.m. Plan to catch up on projects that have been left hanging, handle routine chores and errands in this period. The moon enters passionate Scorpio at 1:51 p.m. and opposes combative Mars at 3:16 p.m. Don't force issues. Compliments will work better than criticism. Storm clouds move out by mid-afternoon. If you have work or study projects to accomplish, you can be most productive.

SUNDAY, MARCH 3

A Scorpio moon sets the stage for a day that holds high potential for productivity. Tackle jobs you have been putting off and get them out of the way. Zero in on projects that have been problematic and glitchy; you can cut through obstacles and find solutions. Give loved ones extra space. People may be moody, pensive. Look within for answers, and you will find what you need to get back on track.

MONDAY, MARCH 4

A lunar alignment to unpredictable Uranus can make for a rough start to this day. Allow extra time for unexpected delays or distractions. Keep a cool head. The Scorpio moon becomes inactive at 9:42 a.m. until 4:55 p.m., when it enters Sagittarius. Instead of launching new enterprises, plan to finish business already begun; review, redo, follow through.

TUESDAY, MARCH 5

Wake up in a good mood. A lunar opposition to Saturn at 8:19 a.m. warns you to avoid rigid time schedules; go with the flow. Fortunately, this influence passes over by midmorning; blue skies and sunshine return during the late morning and afternoon. The last quarter phase of the moon begins at 8:24 p.m. A new moon will culminate March 13. Kick back, relax and unwind this evening.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 6

Take advantage of favorable planetary influences this morning and get an early start. Plan to sign contracts, promote your ideas or start important ventures before 9:00 a.m., when the Sagittarius moon forms a harmonious contact to Mercury. The remainder of the day continues to rate high for new beginnings. This is also a wonderful day for socializing, enjoying favorite sports or leisure activities. The Sagittarius moon becomes inactive at 9:31 p.m. until 11:48 p.m., when it enters Capricorn.

Welcome the early signs of springtime

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Tiny patches of snow linger in the shadier corners of the garden, but with rain in the forecast, these last remnants of winter are likely to be washed away as hints of spring begin to appear here and there.

Each February, the first signs of spring in my own landscape are to be found in my meadow where the pearly, silken catkins of the Japanese fantail willow emerge on curled, twisted and often flattened stems. The contorted branches of this large shrub are a floral designer's delight. Clusters of soft, fuzzy pussy willows form unique patterns on the fasciated stems and typically appear several weeks before their wild cousins that grow alongside my brook. Dozens of cuttings will be taken in the coming weeks to add a touch of springtime to indoor spaces and to propagate this unusual, vigorous, multi-stemmed tree which readily roots in water. A drastic pruning of larger branches will follow to thin out and reduce the height and breadth of this fast-growing shrub.

I paused a moment beside my partially frozen water garden to observe the hundreds of plump buds on the upright branches of my witch hazel 'Arnold Promise' growing nearby. Grown from a tiny, mail order sapling, this fabulous late winter bloomer promises to be smothered in clusters of fragrant, yellow-fringed blossoms later this month. Inspired by the sights and sounds of an impending spring,

A brief stroll through the landscape revealed a few subtle hints that spring might be just around the corner. In my meadow, the pearly, silken catkins of the Japanese fantail willow have already emerged on curled, twisted and flattened stems. The contorted branches of this large shrub are a floral designer's delight. Clusters of soft, fuzzy pussy willows form unique patterns on the fasciated stems and typically appear several weeks before their wild cousins that grow alongside my brook. Dozens of cuttings will be taken in the coming weeks to add a touch of springtime to indoor spaces and to propagate this unusual, vigorous, multi-stemmed tree which readily roots in water. A drastic pruning of larger branches will follow to thin out and reduce the height and breadth of this fast-growing shrub.

I paused for a moment beside my partially frozen water garden to observe hundreds of plump buds on the upright branches of my witch hazel 'Arnold Promise' (Hamamelis) growing nearby. Grown from a tiny, mail order sapling, this fabulous late winter bloomer promises to be smothered in clusters of fragrant, yellow-fringed blossoms later this month. Despite our current wintry conditions, these harbingers of spring offer assurances that the beauty nestled beneath the powdery dusting of snow will soon burst forth.

For months, our seesaw weather pattern has subjected our plants to one extreme after another, a roller coaster ride that is eventually destined to take its toll. Close observation and monitoring of all trees, shrubs and perennials should be exercised during the upcoming spring and summer seasons. Plants weakened by stress tend to be more susceptible to insect infestations and diseases or may suddenly succumb inexplicably as the result of factors suffered months or even years before. Every effort should be made to water, mulch and nourish our treasured plants in future months to minimize losses.

Feeling good about yourself and your body

the mirror, comparing yourself unfavorably to other women, pursuing exercise as punishment for eating too much and as a reason to go out and binge eat, not fitting into a size 6, or just feeling "fat". BBF is an incredible energy drain and if not addressed can lead to a full-blown eating disorder.

There is help and hope. If you or someone you know has an eating disorder, please consider Eating Disorder Awareness Week as an opportunity for helping either yourself or someone you care about to start feeling good about their body and if serious eating disorder problems exists, get connected with professionals who can help. One such organization, the Massachusetts Eating Disorder Association (MEDA), is a non-profit organization dedicated to the prevention and treatment of eating disorders "http://www.medainc.org"

In the meantime, the following 10 tips may help you to banish bad body fever this week and hopefully the weeks to come:

•Celebrate your spirit and marvel in your body, it has amazing capabilities.

•Turn the station on the negative noise in your head, say something nice about yourself instead. You'll be amazed how your negative thoughts won't be so welcomed anymore.

•Learn to accept your size-Legalize your thighs.

•Fuel yourself with food; nourish yourself for the health of it.

•Exercise for pleasure and health, not punishment.

•Connect with friends or loved ones when feeling isolated or blue.

•Give yourself permission to feel free from body hatred-it's fun.

•Take a break from fitness and fashion magazines

•Treat yourself to something you love to do-don't be afraid.

films is even more satisfying, he says.

"When the film on Ray Bourque was shown at Symphony Hall, I was there to see everyone's reactions when the film ended," London recalled. "I experienced the ovation it received and the amazing response everyone had. It was more than I could have ever expected."

Now employed by Cramer, a large marketing company in Norwood, London continues to produce documentaries. Currently working on a 50-year history of the annual Beanpot college hockey tournament with Cramer, London returns to his real passion — hockey.

"I fell in love with hockey when I worked at Channel 38," he said. "I experienced the sport every day in every way possible."

Today London still lives the sport, but in a new way. He is in his forth year as coach for his son's youth hockey team in Hingham, and his second year as a member of the Board of Directors for Hingham Youth Hockey. His job at Cramer allows London to produce the films that he loves, while spending more time with his wife Kim, and his two children, Alex and Emily.

Now when he goes to professional sports games, he brings his family along. London says the excitement of sports isn't all about winning.

"We need to spend more time celebrating these jewels that we have here in New England," he said. "And less time agonizing over scores," he said. "There is a story within every game to be told, and that is what makes this area so great. People love to hear these stories."

Little Harbor sewer floated

Informational forums planned

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Another expensive project could be in the pipeline and the Sewer Commission wants to hear what residents have to say.

The Sewer Commission will conduct two public forums at 7 p.m., March 7 and another at 10a.m, March 9 at Town Hall to solicit the public's opinion about the Little Harbor Sewer Expansion project.

Residents will be informed about the current state of the project and also have a chance to discuss whether it should be funded entirely by users, completely by the town or a 50/50 split between the two.

While the Sewer Commission's Town Meeting article is only asking for $750,000 for engineering design and development costs, the total cost for the project is expected to be close to $10 million.

The project involves increas-

Sometimes they help out with an arts and crafts project, other times they paint fingernails but often, they just listen.

The Montessori Community School in Scituate has been sending sixth-grade students to Sunrise Assisted Living in Cohasset for the past few years as part of the school's community service program. The students come armed with baked goods, energy and plenty of stories.

Last week about 10 students had a chance to reconnect with residents they met last month. Some residents, who have developed relationships with the students, took them into their rooms to showcase their various quilting and artistic talents.

"I enjoy getting their perspective on how they look at life," said sixth-grader Robbie Caming of Marshfield. "It's a real eye-opening experience, I can't wait to come back."

Theresa Olivera, program coordinator at Sunrise, said some of the residents don't have families or friends near by so they cherish the time spent with the kids.

"I've always loved children," said Ann Kabisaitis, a resident of Sunrise. "I look forward to them coming every month and really enjoy their company."

But it's not only the residents who enjoy the company. Many of the students look forward to learning about what life was like when the seniors were their age.

Town Meeting to vote on CPC recommendations

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The newly formed Community Preservation Committee wasted no time in exerting its influence.

At its meeting earlier this week the CPC voted to recommend three proposals to Town Meeting on March 30.

With the money earned from a 1.5 percent real estate tax surcharge and state matching funds, the CPC will recommend spending $165,000 for improvements to the historical society's museums; $100,000 for the construction of two new ball fields at the gravel pits; and $60,000 for 15 years toward the purchase of three lots off Beach Street.

Residents will have a chance to vote on the proposals at Town Meeting and the CPC hopes the townspeople will be able to vote on them separately. At the selectmen's meeting Tuesday, Town Manager Mark Haddad said he will be able to separate the articles.

"We want people to have as much input on each of these proposals as possible," said CPC Chairman Stuart Ivimey.

He said the articles need to be divided at Town Meeting because two of them, the ball fields and historical society's proposals need a majority vote since they concern an appropriation of cash, and one of them, the Beach Street proposal, needs a two-thirds vote because it involves borrowing.

"A substantial amount of funds need to be raised. Anything the CPC can give us would be greatly appreciated."

— Mark DeGiacomo, proponent of Beach Street proposal

While the committee also entertained several new proposals including an indoor swimming pool, a playground and an improved parking lot on Elm Street behind the police-fire station — it decided it would need more time to mull over those ideas.

Consuming much of the discussion at the five-hour meeting Monday was the proposal for money to contribute toward the purchase of three lots off Beach Street. The lots, which are adjacent to the 25-acre Great Brewster Woods in an area known as Great Neck, would add to the town's open space rolls.

Mark DeGiacomo, proponent of the issue, laid out his concerns before the board. Beach Street neighbors, and those concerned with the preservation of open space, are worried about imminent development of the three lots (the developer of one of the lots recently received a variance with conditions from the Conservation Commission). Although proponents once considered asking the town take the land by eminent domain, they decided that was impractical and instead, wish to negotiate the private sale of the lots.

Proponents estimate they will need anywhere from $1.2 million (their appraisal) to $3.5 million (the owners' estimated price) to buy the lots.

"A substantial amount of funds need to be raised," DeGiacomo said. "Anything the CPC can give us would be greatly appreciated."

The board ultimately decided to

Haddad decides to stay in town

Gets $12,000 raise

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Despite the lure of a bigger town, larger budget and higher pay —Town Manager Mark Haddad dropped out of the running for the Dedham town administrator job last week.

Haddad, whom some considered to be the leading contender for the position, called Dedham selectmen last Thursday to take his name off the list of three finalists that also includes Norwell Town Administrator James Boudreau and Seekonk Town Administrator William Keegan Jr.

"With all the projects in the town right now I just felt I couldn't get up and leave in the middle of them," Haddad said.

Over the past two weeks, Cohasset selectmen approached Haddad individually asking him to stay. Selectmen said they would offer Haddad more money if he stayed on board.

"It was understood that if he stayed we'd renegotiate his contract," said Selectman Michael Sullivan.

Haddad, who is currently paid an annual salary of $90,000, said even with a raise there is no way the town could pay him as much as Dedham was offering. The town administrator position in Dedham would pay up to $110,000.

"Money wasn't the issue,"

State mortgage program underway

By Alice Coyle and Mary Ford
ACOYLE@CNC.COM

Teachers, firefighters, police officers or public works employees often cannot afford to live in the towns where they work.

But a new mortgage program through the MassHousing Finance corporation could change that for municipal workers. The Municipal Mortgage Program works with local banks to offer full-time, salaried municipal employees an opportunity to buy a home in the town where they work with no down payment and lower interest rates and closing costs.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, said the program was set up following Sept. 11 when the value of having police officers and firefighters nearby became apparent That thinking evolved into the Municipal Mortgage Program at MassHousing that includes all municipal employees.

"I think it's a terrific program," said state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham. "It's important that municipal workers have the opportunity to live in the towns where they work because that can make for a better work environment.

"But in some cases, such as in Hingham and Cohasset, that hasn't been practicable (due to the cost)," he said.

In Hingham, 639 of the town's 1,314 employees live in town and in Cohasset, 240 of the town's 544 employees live in town.

Although, most municipal employees may have trouble qualifying for a mortgage for the median-priced home in Hingham ($425,500) and in Cohasset ($630,000), the no-down payment feature of the program might bring some houses within reach.

For Hingham and Cohasset that maximum household income is $100,170.

"The down payment is the hardest part," Bradley said. "Especially for people who might be saving for college for the kids." He explained that some of those families might be able to swing a $220,000 mortgage but could not come up with the 5 percent down.

There are eligibility requirements for the program including income criteria that states the municipal employee's household income cannot exceed 135 percent of the HUD median household income for the community in which they are trying to buy a home. For Hingham and Cohasset that maximum household income is $100,170.

Participating banks — there are more than 50 across the state committed to lending $230 million in mortgages under the program — can set their own rates and fees. The initial interest rate and payment on the mortgage must be fixed for five years and must be offered with the no-point price option. Through the program, homebuyers can purchase single-family homes and condominiums with no down payment and with 97 percent financing available for 2-3 or 4-family homes.

Because no down payment is required, good credit is necessary. Those with past credit problems should contact a participating bank and go through a pre-qualification process.

Local banks committing funds to the program will have the loans insured through the MassHousing mortgage insurance fund, established by the legislature, reducing risk to the financial institutions. Participating banks for Hingham and Cohasset include, Scituate Federal Savings, South Shore Savings Bank, Salem Five Cents Saving Bank, Eastern Bank and the First Trade Union Savings Bank. For Cohasset, Middlesex Savings Bank is also participating.

The program is good for first-time homebuyers and municipal workers who want to relocate to the town in which they work in. For example, a Hingham firefighter living in Randolph could use the program to buy a house in Hingham.

For more information about the Municipal Mortgage Program call 1-877-309-HOME (4663) or go to www.masshousing.com

Paramedics added

Town Manager Mark Haddad introduced two new paramedics at selectmen's meeting Tuesday. Leigh Landry and Peter Starvaggi will be starting the fire academy on April 8 and hope to graduate by September.

"I think the town is very lucky to bring two more paramedics on board," Haddad said.

There are now seven paramedics in the Cohasset fire department.

Selectmen invited the Hagerty Property Committee to come in on its March 19 meeting to discuss plans for the dilapidated building. Jack Buckley, head for the Cohasset Maritime Institute, an organization interested in occupying the building, is expected to make a formal presentation at the meeting.

Phone stays

Town Manager Mark Haddad informed selectmen that Verizon has agreed to leave the public payphone at the ball fields on N. Main Street. Previously, Verizon threatened to remove the phone because it wasn't generating enough revenue.

Haddad said the phone is there as a safety precaution and that's why Verizon agreed not to remove it.

Costume collection stored at school

The Cohasset Historical Society is requesting space in two basement rooms of the old Osgood School building to store its costume collection and other artifacts. Town to shoulder state local aid cut

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Throughout the 1990s the state budget grew and so did local aid to cities and towns. It seemed like the bubble would never bust.

"It took 200 years for the state budget to reach $10 billion," says state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, who represents Cohasset. "And just 10 years for it to reach $20 billion."

In 1992, the state budget was about $14 billion and this year's budget is upwards of $23 billion.

But now that state revenues have dropped drastically thanks to the recession, the good times are over for the time being.

Cuts are coming, along with potential tax increases, so the state can balance its $23 billion budget. The cuts will also affect local aid, which is state revenue sharing that comes in a variety of forms to cities and towns from school money to highway funds. The Legislature is constitutionally bound to balance the budget.

Legislators are warning officials in the towns they represent to expect a 10 percent cut in local aid for fiscal year 2003, which starts June 30.

The good news is both the state and Cohasset have socked away money in their particular "rainy day" or stabilization funds, money that should help take the sting out of the loss in revenue over the short term.

That wasn't the case with Beacon Hill in the last recession a decade ago — the one during which Hedlund, now in his fifth term, earned his stripes.

"At that time the state unemployment insurance fund was broke, it now has $1.8 billion and there was no rainy day fund, which no now has $1.2 billion," he said.

Legislators are warning officials in the towns they represent to expect a 10 percent cut in local aid for fiscal year 2003, which starts June 30.

For Cohasset, that means about $170,000 less money than was anticipated. While at times, it seems as though Cohasset pays for its affluence because it doesn't get the level of aid that other towns do, it is also less dependant on state aid. Weymouth, for example, although much larger in size, is bracing for a local aid cut of more than $1 million.

"I'm not happy about it," says Town Manager Mark Haddad about the cut. "It means we'll have to use money from the stabilization fund to make up the difference." That money was set aside to offset the "bubble years" of the school building projects when interest rates are higher before state reimbursement kicks in. Haddad explained that level-funding state aid is more palatable because the amount of aid becomes part of the budget base each year, making a cut painful, he said.

But unlike the dire headlines touting problems in other towns, Cohasset recently received an upgrade in its bond rating and appears to be able to weather the recession without cutbacks, if the recession is short lived as expected.

Town officials won't have to ask for an operating budget override of Proposition 2-1/2 to balance the books for fiscal year 2003 to make up for the local aid cutback. (Prop. 2-1/2 is a state law that limits the amount a community can raise the tax levy over the prior year without voters' approval at the ballot box).

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, says at the end of this fiscal year, it's expected the state will have to make up close to $1 billion.

"We're going to have a $2 billion problem next year," Bradley said, adding that an expected increase of upwards of $900,000 in Medicaid spending is "locked into the budget." Medicaid accounts for more than 23 percent of the state budget, local aid accounts for about 22 percent.

One in six are on Medicaid assistance in the state, which has some of the most generous standards in the nation, according to Hedlund.

Bradley says the fiscal year 2003 deficit will be made up through a combination of cuts, use of the state "rainy day fund," and tax increases.

Although he is open to a potential increase in the cigarette tax, Bradley does not support freezing or reversing the tax rollback because it would not solve the problem and would break faith with voters, who backed the referendum rolling state taxes back to 5 percent. He also supports trimming patronage jobs rather than cutting lower level jobs.

State revenues in January were down by some 18 percent from last year. Revenues come from a variety of sources including the sales tax. Capital gains taxes are down about $1 billion this year because of what's going on in the stock market, Bradley explained.

He said if the state revenues increase in the fall over last year, then the Legislature should be able to level fund local aid next year.

No one opts for open Rec seat

Chairman says the board has lost its clout

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The Recreation Commission is searching for a fifth member for its board. Currently, the commission has three members whose terms have expired but only two are seeking re-election, leaving one open seat. But so far, no one has come forward to fill it.

Chairman Richard Barrow says he's not surprised. The Recreation Commission, an elected board, has lost its authority under the Town Manager Act, passed about five years ago, he said.

Recreation Department Director Jack Worley says the five-year commitment is too long.

Barrow, who has been on the board for 20 years, said he doesn't know why anyone would run for the position. He feels the commission has lost a lot of its power because the Town Manager now controls the commission's budget.

"I don't know what the hell our function is," he said. "We've been diluted so much I don't know what we do." Barrow added at the end of his term he will most likely walk away from the board.

Worley said many residents have told him that they don't want to commit to a board for five years.

"I think the term commitment scares a lot of people off," he said. "We're going to look into getting that reduced."

"We've been diluted so much I don't know what we do."
— Richard Barrow, Chairman

While the Recreation Commission developa some programs throughout the year and is involved in creating summer programs for kids, its budget is now handled through the Town Manager and the selectmen.

"The commission is essentially a policy setting board." Worley said. He added he thinks the position would be filled and looks forward to working with whomever volunteers.

Commissioner Lillian Curley said the board's role is to ensure there are programs available to Cohasset youths.

"However, we basically just support Jack (Worley)," she said. "We're there if the town needs us."

Curley added she would like to see someone who has a real love of children to volunteer for the group.

Town Clerk Marion Douglas said write-in votes could determine who will fill the seat. If a resident receives the most write-in votes but chooses not to accept the position, the Recreation Commission and the selectmen would then convene jointly to appoint a new member.

The town election is April 6.

New Cohasset zoning map is unveiled

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Most residents may think they know exactly where their house is located in relation to zoning districts, but the Planning Board wants to make sure. With a new zoning map to be voted on at Town Meeting in a month, the board is set to hold a public hearing on the map March 6.

"The last map left a lot to the imagination," said Planning Board Chairman Al Moore. "There were a lot of judgement calls that needed to be made, hopefully that will not be the case anymore."

The Planning Board revealed the nearly completed zoning map at its meeting last week. In what promises to be a more "user-friendly" map than the one drawn up in 1995, the map clearly delineates zoning districts, shows street names and house numbers for points of reference, and is color-coded.

"The greatest benefit is that most citizens will be able to read it." Bill Good, a member of the Planning Board said. "This is the best zoning map the town has ever had."

"The greatest benefit is that most citizens will be able to read it."
— Bill Good, Planning Board

According to Town Planner Liz Harrington, the Planning Board hired a geographical information systems contractor to design the map.

"There was another level of detail added which will help when deciding were to build," she said.

Harrington said while nothing on the map has changed in relation to zoning boundaries, the map is more accurate in pinning parcels of lands to their respective zones.

"People should definitely come out and take a look at this," she said. "Once it's voted in by Town Meeting it becomes difficult to change."

The board was required to create a new map because of several zoning changes brought on by Town Meeting over the last year. The map needed to be updated to include the new technology business district, new open space district (formerly the Hagerty property) and the water resource district.

"We were obligated to have a new map," Moore said. "I'm glad we were, it enabled us to really research what we wanted to do."

Moore said the board, and the engineering firm, has spent an extraordinary amount of time developing the map.

"This has not been an easy task," he said.

The new map will on display at Town Hall until the March 30 Town Meeting were residents will have the chance to vote on to approve it.

America's greatest lifesaver celebrated

March 19, 2002 marks 100 years since the death of the greatest lifesaver in the history of America. Joshua James was born in Hull and lived his entire life there and the Hull Lifesaving Museum will mark the event on Tuesday, March 19 at 6 p.m. at the museum on 1117 Nantasket Ave. in Hull. Admission is free.

Joshua James lived to be 75 and devoted 60 of those years saving more than 1,000 lives from shipwreck at the mouth of Boston Harbor. Amazingly, no one ever died in a rescue in which he participated. Joshua James and the surfmen from Hull's Massachusetts Humane Society and the U.S. Life Saving Service crews were the best in the world. Their achievements are honored through exhibits and programs at the Hull Lifesaving Museum, as well as James's former Point Allerton U.S. Life-Saving Station.

The lifesaving museum is now launching a year-long series of exhibits, lectures and special programs illuminating James's deeds and their significance in the 21st century. The exhibit kicks off Tuesday, March 19 at 6 p.m. by laying a wreath , to the sound of bagpipes, on the waters at Stony Beach where James worked. Everyone is welcome.

Prior to the formation of the U.S. Life-Saving Service, which began off the New Jersey coast in the 1870s, lifesaving operations in this country were entirely voluntary. The Massachusetts Humane Society, founded in 1785, was a highly professional, community-based organization. The humane society's first lifeboat was launched in 1807 from Cohasset. As the commonwealth and its commerce grew, so did the Humane Society's scope. By the time of the Civil War, society-funded boats, boathouses and Houses of Refuge dotted the coastline. Countless thousands of lives were saved by volunteer lifesavers, all compelled — as were Joshua James and his crewmates — by a powerful reverence for life, coupled with a dauntless respect for the sea.

For detailed information on the museum and The Joshua James Centennial: 100th Anniversary of the Death of America's Greatest Lifesaver, call Lory Newmyer at 781-925-5433; or visit their Web site at www.hullmuse@channell.com.

recommend spending $60,000 a year for 15 years which is approximately $610,000 if it were to be bonded now. There are a few conditions placed on the recommendation including one which states an executed purchase and sale agreement must be signed by all parties by April 1, 2003, a year from Town Meeting. Another contingency is if the real estate market drops and the lots sell for less money, the board is only committed to half of the price of the lots, or however much of the $60,000 for 15 years it has already spent, whichever is less.

The money will not be funded unless the sale is completed, which means the CPC could theoretically not spend any money at all.

In a telephone interview Ellen Morrissey, owner of two of the lots, said the effort is fruitless.

"The lots are not for sale, and will never be for sale to anyone that has opposed the development of housing," she said. "I've never been contacted by any group concerning a sale, the properties will be developed."

Undeterred, the group intends to raise the remainder of the money by soliciting neighbors and private donors to contribute to the cause. DeGiacomo said the property is well worth the effort.

"This property is very unique to the town," he said. "You're not going to find another property of open space that's in the middle of town."

George McGoldrick, 93 Black Rock Road, said while he doesn't live on Beach Street, he'd like to see the property preserved.

"Any open space is great for the town," he said.

The CPC struggled with its decision and batted the issue back and forth for some time. Proponents were asking for $75,000 a year for 20 years which ends up being close to $1 million.

Planning Board Chairman Al Moore, and member of the CPC, had mixed feelings.

"I think it's a noble proposal," Moore said. "But the money you're asking for represents 20 percent of our allowance over the next 20 years."

The CPC, which is anticipating having $500,000 by October, is required under the Community Preservation Act to spend 10 percent of its money on historic preservation, 10 percent on community housing, and 10 percent on open space. The remaining 70 percent can go for any of the above.

Ivimey, the chairman, suggested lowering the amount of money and reducing the number of years.

"It's a great piece of land that I think we all want to see preserved," he said. "But the money you're asking for is just too steep."

Other proposals

While the CPC spent less money than expected on the Beach Street proposal, it considerably upped its ante on the proposal by the historical society. Originally seeking only around $11,000 the group amended its proposal asking for more than 10 times the amount.

Richard Silvia, a member of the CPC, said the $11,000 just wasn't enough.

"That would be used for patchwork repairs," he said. "The renovations are a lot more complex than that."

The CPC decided to recommend $165,000 which will be overseen by the board. For every project that needs to be done, the historical society will have to come before the CPC to deduct funds from the account.

Tom Gruber, member of the historical society, made a presentation to the group outlining its needs. He said while the society has been able to raise a significant amount of money to help paint, re-roof, sewer and put new signage on the buildings, it still needs more money.

There are three main projects that the historical society needs funding for which includes creating handicapped access for the Wilson house and Maritime Museum, deconstructing and reconstructing the Wilson house in accordance with the guidelines established by the Department of the Interior for restoring a historic building, and a water diversion project to direct as much runoff as possible away from the Wilson house.

"We need to make some of these changes immediately," Gruber said. "Not only will it make the museums a nice place to visit, it will help us get up to code so we can procure grants."

Currently, because two of the museums are not handicapped accessible, the historical society is unable to secure grants. The society wishes to build the ramps in harmony with the village revitalization project.

"It wouldn't make sense to dig up the sidewalks twice," Gruber said.

The most serious project concerns rotting underpinnings to the Wilson house. The society needs to excavate around the building and slowly deconstruct the damaged areas to find exactly how deep the problem runs.

"It's a very slow process, almost like forensic science," Gruber said. "If you want to do this right it takes time, and money."

Ivimey said the project falls squarely with the CPC's spending mandate and he's excited about the project.

"It's such a jewel of our town it warrants significant spending," he said.

The final proposal the CPC is recommending is $100,000 to be used toward the construction of two ball fields at the gravel pits.

DeGiacomo, proponent of both the ball fields and the Beach Street proposal, said the Gravel Yard Reuse Committee is looking to secure funding from a variety of sources for the ball fields.

Ivimey said he's looking forward to working with the town on this project.

"Many in people in town like this idea and I think is a good idea to partner with the town on this project," he said.

While the CPC will contribute $100,000, Little League is expected to kick in $100,000 and residents will have a chance to vote on an article at Town Meeting that would appropriate $200,000 toward the project.

Residents will have a chance to vote on these articles at annual Town Meeting on March 30.

Montessori kids bridge the generation gap at Sunrise little bit of themselves," said their teacher Joanne Kinsman. "While they're not receiving material gifts, they get a lot more."

This year, the school started its monthly visits in February when students went to Sunrise and interviewed the residents.

"I love these people," said sixth-grader Sally Meehan of Cohasset. "They are so interesting to talk to and learn from."

In an article written for the Montessori school newspaper after the students' first visit to Sunrise this year, Meehan and two other students shared their feelings.

"Many of our classmates bonded with certain people while others enjoyed mingling," the article stated. "Through this experience we learned many life lessons such as, don't judge a book by its cover and beauty lies within."

A former Scituate resident at the home, who wished to remain nameless, said she is one of 10 children and when the students visit, it brings her back to her youth.

"They're just a joy to be with," she said. "I'm thrilled every time they come and visit us."

The resident said she tries to tell the students how fortunate they are.

"We were raised during the Great Depression and didn't have a thing," she said. "They have many more opportunities than we ever did."

Liz Knox, communications director at the Montessori School, said the school places an emphasis on community service and includes it in part of its curriculum for all grades.

"We believe that community service promotes respect and awareness beyond our classroom," she said.

Olivera, the Sunrise program director, tries to offer a variety of programs to the residents including bringing entertainers in, making ceramics, taking the residents shopping and leading trips to the South Shore Vocational Technical School in Hanover for lunch. She said she continually tries to reach out to the community in an effort to bring more kids into Sunrise.

"The residents always enjoy a change of pace," she said. "I try to run as many programs as I'm able to."

SPRING FEVER

Hello Cohasset. March roars in like a lion and out like a lamb! Do you think this is a true story? With that quick blast of wind this past Sunday, it could be true, we will see. It is very nice to see some of the flowers starting to peek out and the animals starting to come out of hiding. I find that we as people tend to retreat and hide in the winter as well. I hope that spring fever brings us out and about from our winter hibernation.

LOCAL SURVIVOR

Did anyone catch the first show of Survivor last Thursday? I was able to watch some of it and I was a little nervous about Cohasset's Kathy at first but she seemed to gain the respect of the Tribe and make it onto the next show. Make sure to tune in tonight and cheer her on! For those of you who did not hear or read the story on Kathy, she graduated from CHS in 1972 after living here for a few years. Her name is Kathy Vavrick-O'Brien and she is currently living in Vermont. It is kind of neat to be able to watch someone on TV and know that she was here in Cohasset. She even includes graduating from here on her bio on the show's Web site. Keep watching each week and we will all see where it takes her.

CAROLINE DELIMA STARS IN 'CABARET'

The Company Theatre in Norwell invites you to experience the divinely decadent Kit Kat Club in 1930's Berlin with its Spring musical extravaganza, "Cabaret." The show opens March 15 and continues through April 7.

Cohasset's Caroline deLima portrays the irresistible Sally Bowles. Zoe Bradford and Jordie Saucerman are directing the production, with Michael Joseph serving as musical director for the 13-piece orchestra.

Tickets, priced $20-$25, are now on sale at The Company theater box-office located at 30 Accord Park Drive in Norwell, or by calling 781-871-2787. Wednesday and Thursday night performances are at 7:30pm, Friday and Saturday nights at 8 p.m., and Sundays at 3 p.m. You can also visit the Web site at www.companytheatre.com.

LAW BOARD AT SYRACUSE

Gregory L. Thornton of Cohasset, who works for the Boston Globe, serves on the Syracuse University College of Law Board of Visitors. Founded in 1932, the Law Board of Visitors provides educational opportunities to law students at the university. Members, like Gregory, are called upon throughout the year for advice or to participate in college programs or planning activities. Members also serve as advocates for the college and provide counsel and expertise in order to bring alumni, judges and business leaders closer to students and faculty in the College of Law.

AWARDED LEGION OF MERIT

U.S. Navy Capt. Daniel J. Brennock of Cohasset has been awarded the Legion of Merit from the President of the United States for "exceptionally meritorious conduct in the performance of outstanding service" as commanding officer and professor of Naval Science at the Naval Reserve Officers Training Corps (NROTC) Unit, College of Holy Cross from June 1998-August 2001.

"Through superb leadership, personal initiative and focused effort, Capt. Brennock was instrumental in reducing administrative barriers, improving training and academic achievement, increasing opportunities for productivity and experience, and was significantly influential in retaining all qualified staff and student personnel," wrote Admiral V.E. Clark, Chief of Naval Operations.

Dan is a 1969 graduate of CHS and graduated in 1973 from Illinois Institute of Technology in Chicago in the NROTC program. The son of Mary Brennock, Dan has had many assignments all over the world, including Ireland, Alaska, Hawaii, France, Italy and Spain. He is currently serving as Commander of Naval Education Training at the War College in Newport, R.I.

JOINED SORORITY

I had a wonderful message from a very proud Mom and wanted to share it with everyone. Karen McMorris, a freshman at Emory University in Atlanta was invited to join the Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority! Kappa held its first annual mother/daughter weekend Feb. 22-24 and Karen's mom, Ronnie, and her fifth-grade sister, Rachel, were able to attend this fun-filled weekend with other Kappa sisters and their moms. Everyone enjoyed the weekend immensely, meeting friends of Karen's and spending time on the campus. Ronnie, Rachel and Karen also did some sightseeing in Atlanta and were able to visit Ronnie's favorite, "The Jimmy Carter Library and Museum." What a super time you must have had and the feeling of pride in your daughter must be huge!

Festival supports annual Appalachia Service Project

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The Rev. Gary Ritts hopes to bring a touch of Appalachia to Cohasset.

On Saturday, March 9, the Cohasset Appalachia Service Project, sponsored by the Second Congregational Church, will hold an Appalachia festival at St. Anthony's Parish Center.

The event is a fundraiser for the group, which plans to raise a total of about $95,000 for its annual service project in Tennessee. The event that is expected to raise $1,500 will include Appalachia crafts and quilts as well as dinner and two local blue grass bands. Saturday's festival is only one in a series of fundraisers to help send the more than 150 people, who will travel down south this summer.

"It should be a really great time," Ritts said. "It will be nice for some New Englanders to experience a completely different culture."

The group which is largely made up of Cohasset residents, will venture down to Tennessee in June to help build homes for those less fortunate.

The citizens are involved in the Appalachia Service Project, started 33 years ago by a reverend in Kentucky.

"By putting aside selfish needs and desires, ASP volunteers free themselves to share talent, love and concern with the people of Appalachia," the ASP brochure states. "More important than construction know-how is a willingness to enter the communities and homes of central Appalachia with sensitivity and accepting people just the way they are."

The Cohasset program is in its 15th year and Ritts said it has grown exponentially every year. It started in 1998 when Ritts and his wife took seven kids in one van down to Tennessee. Now the group will be charting five buses and the people will eventually be divided into 25 vans, which will go to a variety of different areas to help construct homes.

"When we started this, we saw that when kids are helping others they're learning so much about themselves," he said. "There is genuine compassion there."

When asked by those who wonder why the group needs to travel below the Mason-Dixon line to find poverty when they could drive 30 minutes up I-93, Ritts explains a group of Cohasset residents in the poorer parts of Boston might be seen as "well off do-gooders" while going down south lessens the stereotype.

"There are still some eyebrows raised when we tell them we're from New England," Ritts said. "But by the time we leave, they're saying 'people from Boston aren't that bad.'"

Ritts said the trip is a real eye-opener for the group as well. He said participants are placed outside their comfort zone by sleeping on the floor at area schools.

"You really don't know the experience till you've done it," he said. "It's a real shocker and something none of us are used to."

Scott Faber, 10 Bayberry Lane and junior at Cohasset High, said the experience made him realize how fortunate he is. Faber participated in the program last year and will join the group again in June.

"It was so hard to leave after five days," he said. "You feel like you haven't finished the job and you need to go back."

Anna Roach, senior at Notre Dame Academy in Hingham, is going on the trip for the third year in a row.

"It's truly amazing to go down there for a week," she said. "In makes you realize how much we have in Cohasset and we can't take anything for granted."

Tickets are available for the Appalachia Festival at St. Anthony's Church, St. Stephen's Church and the First Parish and Second Congregational Church. Tickets for dinner and the performance are $20 for adults, $10 for children age 10-18 and $5 for those kids nine and under.

Tommy Myers (on the ladder), Brian Bilton (on the roof) and Nicole Needle construct a new roof for a mobile home.

Anna Roche, Elaine Coyne and Joel Carpenter work on a project during last year's Appalachia Service Project in Tennessee.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

'Bubba' fever

Did Claudia Quigley overreact after hearing a white teacher's portrayal of a fictional brother of one of the New England Patriot's black players over the PA system at the Osgood School two days before the Super Bowl?

In our opinion, yes.

It wasn't necessary for her and her husband to write a long, preachy letter to the editor taking the schools to task and suggesting sensitivity training in matters of diversity. Mrs. Quigley could have registered her concern privately to the school principal, School Committee and Superintendent — and that could have been the end of it.

But the facts are the Quigleys chose to write the letter and we chose to print it. We stand behind our decision that the letter was newsworthy and think we did our homework by also running a story explaining what had occurred.

Subsequently, we've provided a forum for our readers, a handful of whom responded with letters themselves.

But lost in all the debate over the Quigleys' reaction or overreaction is whether there is a need for more awareness, or sensitivity training in our schools and town. The school officials we interviewed for the story correctly said there is always room for growth in that area.

When all this began weeks ago, we would have sided with those who just wanted to get past the incident and move on. Although Cohasset is not diverse, we have understood the community to be a tolerant place that includes one of the oldest METCO programs in the state, a Diversity Committee, the Appalachia Service Project, and the "No Place for Hate" pledge that incorporates educational programs.

But the "overreaction" of some parents and other citizens in their responses to Claudia and Andrew Quigleys' letter detailing the Super Bowl incident has begun to change our thinking.

While we have received many thoughtful letters and several phone calls on the matter — we have also received hateful letters (which we refused to publish) and angry phone calls that were either personal attacks on the Quigleys themselves, the newspaper or someone with an ax to grind with the schools.

Last week, we published another letter that we thought advanced the debate. Marylou Clark, a Southerner and a college teacher, shared with us her views and what a couple of her students of different ethnic backgrounds thought about a white person imitating a black person over a loud speaker. She also wondered if a person of color would find her imitation of Eddie Murphy offensive. The printing of her letter unleashed a new round of angry calls.

We find it ironic that some of those so upset with the Cohasset Mariner and the Quigleys — are not receptive to any criticism or suggestions themselves.

It's time we all took a step back and reexamine the aftermath of what was no doubt an entirely innocent spoof during Super Bowl fever. If we can move forward from this point with an open mind then perhaps "Bubba" Smith did us a favor after all.

As Ms. Clarke stated, "Maybe what is needed here is some sensitivity training for all of us in Cohasset, living as we do, so removed from the world around us."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

No more insults

I have been reading for many years Mr. R. Murray Campbell's letters to the editor. And for many of those years, I have bit my tongue. I guess now is the time to write this letter.

I, for one, am getting a bit weary of Mr. Campbell's personal attacks on people who he doesn't agree with. I realize he doesn't name names, but you don't have to be a rocket scientist to know who is he attacking. He certainly has the right to disagree with other people's thoughts and beliefs. However, I do not believe that he has to personalize them.

The latest case, in the Feb. 28, 2002 edition of the Mariner, Mr. Murray states in his letter, and I quote, "The Friends of Cohasset Harbor got petulant." Why doesn't Mr. Murray state that the Friends didn't agree, or didn't approve or requested a change. He then goes on to accuse them of "whining to our selectmen." Why does he have to make his opinions sarcastic and negative?

Let me reiterate. Mr. Murray has every right to disagree with people's ideas and thoughts. But I leave him with this thought. Reasonable people can agree to disagree reasonable. Let's leave out the insults and innuendoes.

I am not writing this letter on behalf of the Friends of Cohasset Harbor. This is my personal opinion. And I am sure that I will be the subject of one of his letters.

Cohasset can't afford ball fields

TO THE EDITOR:

I was concerned when I read last week's Mariner article about the proposed new ball fields. What I cannot reconcile is why when taxpayers have sent a strong message that they are very concerned about rapidly escalating taxes are we considering putting $200,000 into state of the art ball fields? Please do not misunderstand me, I think athletics are very important. However, to designate such a large amount of money to a project that benefits such a very small percentage of the population for such a short period of time each year seems inappropriate.

How many other causes are there in town that could benefit substantially by receiving those funds, or even a portion of them? For example, how we can we say that we support our police force when we vote down upgrading the police station but talk about more Little League fields? How about the elderly that are in such need of additional housing and the fact that the town is well behind where we should be as far as providing affordable housing? And then there is the Osgood School that does not have maps or globes for its classrooms; and of course there is the significant looming issue about the timing of the state's payment of the school construction funds. These are only a small few of what I am sure are countless other very important and truly needed causes. And do not forget that we are not only talking about the $200,000 for the construction costs but there is significant value in the land that would be used as well.

Finally, I encourage people to carefully read the reports recently completed by The Growth and Development Committee. The work is extremely well presented in a very professional manner. The results of the town-wide survey they took shows that residents overwhelmingly listed fiscal management and taxes as primary concerns. Also of note is that one of the other top four concerns was more senior citizen and affordable housing. Youth activities were listed as a concern but well below these other issues. These results are important and should be acknowledged when proposals such as the ball parks are made. Do state of the art ball parks really reflect the desires of the taxpayers of Cohasset?

Brudnoy's world view off the mark

DEAR COHASSET CHAMBER BOARD MEMBER:

I applaud your intention to bring a controversial and well know speaker to the Chamber annual meeting last Thursday night at Atlantica. However I am writing you to express my disappointment with Mr. Brudnoy's diatribe.

His simplistic world view is shaped by extreme politics and hatred. He claims to be more familiar with The Holy Qur'an (Koran) than most noted scholars of the Muslim faith. Brudnoy's simple answer to complex world challenges is to wipe out all Muslims. He ridiculed President Bush as being naive to think it's only the terrorists that are our enemy and not the entire Islamic world. He had nothing positive to say about any American institution including the education system that he is marginally involved in. His reaction and hatred is exactly what Osama bin Laden hoped to tap into and ignite with the September 11th attack. Jihad or Holy War will not become a reality if it is US Troops and allies against the Taliaban and Al Quade. It would only become a reality if the White House and State Department took Brudnoy's approach. They understand that the 15 Saudi hijackers were 15 out of 16 million Saudis or 15 out of one billion Muslims worldwide.

Adel Al Jubeir, a senior adviser on foreign affairs for the Saudi Palace says ," They do not represent a trend in Saudi Arabia, any more than David Koresh represented a trend in Christianity, or Tim McVeigh represented a movement in America."

Salam Al Marayati, Executive Director of Muslim Public Affairs Council stated in a speech at the US State Department in January, "These self-proclaimed and unqualified experts on Islam only increase divisiveness and the gulf of misunderstandings. They define groups and peoples according to their agenda."

My suggestion for future speakers would be have someone with relevant subject matter and not allow the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce Annual Meeting be an forum to spread political hatred. The Chamber is a good organization of good people.

Wrought up about fences

TO THE EDITOR:

Once all of us were babies, a few cute and huggable, but all unhappy with change. Change our baby mush and we revolted, change our nap time and we fretted. (Only change we appreciated was diaper change). The resistance to change remains into adulthood with many of us; we tend to like what we are used to. Maybe that's why the continuing resistance to sprucing up our village and harbor (It's hard to halt the decay without introducing changes intended to improve aesthetics, safety, convenience or durability).

Only after we buy a new (or newer) car do we realize how unsatisfactory the old clunker had become.

Much ado has been made about a consultant's sketch which appears to show a wrought iron fence. One could argue that such a fence is the most attractive choice as well as being historically apt, but argument may be pointless because such a fence probably would be far too costly to consider. As for durability, there are wrought iron ornamental grills in Italy more than 600 years old, and wrought iron anchors survive many decades of service, some eventually to become ornaments in parks.

In any case, the town would benefit from reasoned and moderate input to the revitalization discussions, and not from angry denunciations of the process, of imagined motivations, and of preliminary sketches intended to provoke thoughtful discussion.

Anyway, the moon will continue to shine brightly on our beautiful harbor no matter what we do about the walk, fence and lighting.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Selectman:
Some say Cohasset is in danger of becoming a haven only for the rich. What can you do to see that doesn't occur?

SELECTMAN/Roger Hill

Cohasset has become one of the most desirable places to live on the South Shore. Breath taking ocean views, and outstanding school system, access to the water at both beaches and the harbor. Why wouldn't we all want to continue to live here?

Unfortunately, as Cohasset has become more and more desirable, many people, especially senior citizens, are being priced right out of town. One of the primary reasons I decided to run for selectman this year is to work to make Cohasset more affordable. I think we need to do two things to accomplish this.

We need to set better priorities in order to control local taxes. We simply can't build everything at once. The impact on our property taxes is simply too severe in too short a time.

Secondly, we need to seriously work to build affordable housing. The Avalon Bay proposal is not really a solution to our affordable housing need, but a disaster waiting to hit us.

On neither issue have the current selectmen shown the leadership we need? I don't think so. I don't see the setting of spending priorities that we deserve. I don't see a real effort to push ahead with town controlled affordable housing and I don't see the selectmen joining the planning board or school committee to fight Avalon.

Over the next year, the master plan is the process that we all need to work with to accomplish these goals to preserve the character of our town. Just as importantly, all of this takes new leadership on our Board of Selectmen.

SELECTMAN/Fred Koed

Cohasset has been blessed with a beautiful rocky coastline, sandy beaches and a great harbor. Cohasset's waterfront property will most likely always demand a premium on the real estate market. Cohasset has also been fortunate to be in close proximity of open space for walking and recreation. These are just a few of the factors that cause increased demand for housing in Cohasset.

Another factor is the Cohasset School System. Families with children approaching school age seek to move to Towns like Cohasset with good school systems, to ensure a good education for their children. Those are some of the reasons my family moved to Cohasset in 1961. When I grew up here there was diversity in incomes throughout town. I think that diversity is valuable to us all.

I have served on the Cohasset Housing Authority (CHA), where we worked to modernize the 64 units of affordable elderly housing on Elm Street. While on the CHA, we designed and built eight units of affordable Chapter 689 Housing for the Department of Mental Retardation. This housing has allowed many individuals to live with a sense of independence and dignity. Later, I served on the Cohasset Habitat Tenant Selection Committee and helped to select two young families with Cohasset roots to get started with home-ownership. I am proud of those accomplishments along with other Cohasset volunteers.

As we face the challenges of the 21st century, I look forward to continuing to represent those people in Cohasset who are willing to reach out and give a helping hand to those with greater needs. I look forward to when Cohasset can form new partnerships with the state, affordable housing advocates, and private non profits to create new opportunities for the middle class and working families to live and raise families in Cohasset.

SELECTMAN/ Ronnie McMorris

Cohasset is a highly desirable community to live in. Property values remain high because of its natural beauty, beaches, parks and historic common, combined with a first rate school system and a safe, small town environment. Historically, there have always been many areas in town where houses were affordable. When Dave and I fell in love with and bought our house on Doane Street 16 years ago, it was affordable for our young family.

Today such homes are more difficult to find and we are at risk of losing the economic diversity that makes Cohasset such a wonderful place to live.

We on the South Shore are not alone in experiencing escalating home values and grappling with affordability issues. Even with an economic downturn, a strong real estate market prevails in the Boston area. The question remains, can (and should) the Board of Selectmen address these issues?

First, I continue to support a policy of exerting more control on local spending. In these financial times we must watch every dollar. The town is in the midst of some badly needed capital projects; however all new projects should pass a rigid "needs" test.

Second, through sound master planning and land use controls we can try to protect the affordability of some areas of town. I initiated the Growth & Development Task Force that is now in the process of developing plans and proposals for the town's future.

Third, I support housing options like the accessory dwelling by-law and senior housing clusters. I have worked on the senior housing committee to develop "affordable" housing choices for our older residents.

We have a mix of residents that lend so much to this great community, young as well as more senior members; wealthy as well as average families. We should maintain that winning combination.

School Committee:
The School Committee negotiates teacher salary increases of 3 percent or more, not including steps, when the town can only raise taxes 2-1/2 percent a year without an override. Something may have to give in the school budget. What are your priorities?

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Jane Pescatore

Excellence in education for all students in Cohasset, whether they are honors, special needs, or "just average", is my priority. Clearly, attracting high-quality teachers is the cornerstone to achieving that priority. What we offer teachers to entice them to work in Cohasset must be competitive with what comparable school systems are offering. Even with the increases negotiated in the current contract, Cohasset is only on a par with other schools that are competing for the same caliber of teachers.

Another element necessary to achieve this excellence is class size. Again, Cohasset has made a commitment to keep class size down because studies have shown that smaller classes are conducive to better learning.

The commitment to the Town to be diligent in the maintenance of school buildings is one I also wholeheartedly support.

Further, I believe that it is incumbent on the School Committee to share openly with all residents the true cost of education in Cohasset. The question then is whether we can afford it. If we can't, the schools must place constraints on additional spending. If you look at the budget process that has just been completed for 2002-03, it is clear that compromise was made on all levels to stay within the amount suggested for the schools by the Town. Very few increases, outside of teacher salaries and the addition of teachers needed to maintain class size, were included, but I believe it is a budget that will insure a continued emphasis on excellence in education.

Next week's questions:

Selectman candidates:
Why do you think some are so opposed to the proposed expansion of Cohasset Plaza? Where do you stand?

School Committee candidate:
Since Education Reform, has the School Committee become a rubber stamp for the Superintendent of Schools?

Responses should be brief — no more than 300 words — and must be received by 5 p.m., Monday. Candidates are asked to be specific and make every word count. Submissions will be cut if they exceed the word limit. (We use the word-count feature on the computer to determine the number of words.)Candidates may reply by e-mail at mford@cnc.com; by fax at 781-741-2931, or by dropping off their responses at the Cohasset Mariner office in the Hingham Journal Building, 73 South St., Hingham Square. Another 'Fight of the Century'

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I can tell you right now where I'm gonna be next Wednesday night at 9 o'clock.

I'll be curled up in front of my 25 inch Sharp with a jug of Merlot and a basket of freshly popped Orville Redenbacher within reach and the set tuned to the Fox Network (Channel 6 on my cable menu).

I'll be watching Paula Jones, beloved by Republicans and disdained by Democrats, who nearly brought down the presidency of Bill Clinton, duke it out with Tonya Harding, the truck-driving former figure skater from Oregon and the baddest of the bad girls of the '90s, in the latest "Fight of the Century."

I kid you not. I'll be watching if only to see how well Paula's plastic surgery stands up to Tonya's left jabs and right crosses.

There'll be a championship belt for the winner, of course — the coveted Golden Garter Belt, I suppose.

Critics hold that the bout between Paula and Tonya will ruin whatever was left of the onetime "sweet science" of boxing after Mike Tyson got through chewing Evander Holyfield's ear off.

But Mike Darnell, Fox-TV's alternative programming boss, will tell you it's strictly on the up and up.

"This is legitimate," he said without cracking a smile. "We'll have a real referee, a real doctor, and real announcers. To all the world, this will be a real boxing match."

Legitimate, too, is the preliminary fight between former child stars Danny Bonaduce of the 1970s sitcom "The Partridge Family"and Barry Williams of the sitcom "The Brady Bunch" from the same TV era.

At last report, Darnell was seeking a third celebrity fight to fill out the card. May I suggest Lorena Bobbift (minus her famed butcher knife, of course) and Monica Lewinsky, fetchingly clad in a blue dress?

The fighting celebs will wear extra large gloves and helmets and, even as we speak, are receiving boxing lessons — mostly, I understand, by watching videos of the latest Mike Tyson press conference.

Seriously, though, has network television, once the wholesome home of Edward R. Murrow, Walter Cronkite, and "Father Knows Best," sunk to this level in the face of the challenge from cable and satellite dish?

I thought the bottom had been plumbed when CBS dumped a boatload of volunteers on an island in the East Indies and let them run around half dressed and eating worms while the cameras rolled.

Now they have survivors running around half dressed and eating worms everywhere from Australia to Africa while the cameras roll on and on and on.

Increasingly, I find myself catching the news on MSNBC, the documentaries on the History or Discovery Channels or A & E, and movies on HBO and IFC, the Independant Film Channel.

In fact, except for Bruins and Patriots games, I rarely turn to the networks anymore, although I'll admit I tune in the Regis Philbin show on CBS now and then, mostly to assure myself that Kathie Lee is really gone.

Next Wednesday, however, I'll be right in there watching Channel 6 (or 25 on the broadcast channel) to see if Tonya (sans pipe) can handle Paula (sans lawyers) in the latest Fight of the Century.

Master Plan consultants selected

MASTER PLAN

GROWTH & DEVELOPEMENT COMMITTEE

The Growth and Development Committee announces the selection of a team of consultants to help complete a town Master Plan. Community Design Partnership of Boston, leading a team that includes Bennett Associates of Norwell and Technology Planning & Management Corporation of Scituate, will help facilitate the planning process and provide the economic and strategic planning assistance and mapping necessary to complete the plan. The Growth and Development Committee was appointed in 2000 by the selectmen to draft a town Master Plan to provide a thoughtful and long term strategy to manage town growth.

Supported by consultant assistance, the Growth and Development Committee will continue to lead a process that has included neighborhood workshops, a resident survey, scores of meetings with boards and commissions, preliminary data collection, newspaper articles, a newsletter and development of a draft vision statement. Hundreds of hours have been donated to help bring the process to a point where consultant expertise can be most effectively utilized. Consultant tasks include, among others, highly accurate mapping and a long-range decision support model for providing "what if" analysis on economic, environmental, and growth choices.

Community Design Partnership

Lead consultant Community Design Partnership (CDP) is a planning and design firm that brings a comprehensive understanding of the interrelationship between economic, environmental and community development goals. CDP, a firm with extensive municipal planning experience, was hired by Cohasset in 1996 to help draft the Open Space and Recreation Plan and is currently completing a master plan for the town of Norwell. CDP principal, Larissa Brown, Ph.D., AICP, chairs the Cambridge Planning Board and co-chairs the Civic Initiative for a Livable New England, a forum series sponsored by the Boston Society of Architects.

Bennett Associates

Bennett Associates, led by project manager RichardKobayashi, AICP, provides municipal management expertise that will help link conceptual planning to capital and operating budget processes for the town. Bennett Associates also provides expertise in the areas of economic forecasting, development impacts, zoning revision and transportation engineering.

Technology Management and Planning Corporation

Technology Management and Planning Corporation (TPMC) will provide coordination of Geographic Information Systems (GIS) development and master plan mapping. Led by Cohasset resident Jeff Donze, TPMC will oversee an effort that includes updating an electronic version of the town assessor maps to include building footprints, rights-of-way, easements and other relevant items. TPMC recently completed land use mapping for the Cohasset Water Commission and Mr. Donze assisted the Open Space Committee complete its mapping requirements for the latest update to the Open Space and Recreation Plan. TPMC is currently completing municipal mapping projects in Scituate, Hanson and Amherst.

Please call Liz Harrington at Town Hall to further discuss the Master Plan consulting team or to volunteer and look for a Committee newsletter that will be available at Town Meeting.

LIBRARY CORNER

Jan Karon Fans

Jan Karon's novels about the characters and events in the small town of Mitford have gained a large readership. Her light, humorous stories feature the autocratic Miss Sadie, genial father Tim and his irrepressible young charge, Dooley Barlow, local realtor "Mule" Skinner and many other colorful personalities. To date there are six Mitford novels plus the short Christmas story, "The Mitford Showman," published in December, 2001.

Readers who enjoy Karon's books may be delighted to discover, or rediscover, a similar series of novels written in the 1950's under the pseudonym of Miss Read. "The Village School" and "Storm in the Village" are just two of her many books about the English village of Fairacre. Read's books have been described as "wise, kindly, full of rural charm, atmosphere and character."

Come in and enjoy the works of Jan Karon at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Designed by Cohasset native Harold Coughlin with a cover photo by Margot Cheel, this wonderful conclusion to a century in Cohasset is available by sending a check for $27.50 payable to the "Town of Cohasset" to Wigmore Pierson, 123 Atlantic Ave, Cohasset, MA 02025. After publication the price of the book will be $32.50, so order now.

Poster contest

The Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners is sponsoring a statewide poster contest called, "Read Into It." The contest is open to students in grades 7 to 12. The theme is, "What your library means to you." Come and get your contest rules at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. All posters need to be submitted to Mrs. Moody by March 22. The grand prize statewide winner will have their poster turned into a 12 inch x 25 inch billboard and will receive additional prizes at the awards ceremony.

Water tastes bad

TO THE WATER COMMISSION:

I am writing to you because I have seen several articles in the newspapers lately concerning both the sale of Town water to the Mass-American Water Company and the potential inclusion of the North Cohasset area into the Cohasset water system. I, for one, am strongly opposed to both of these actions.

For the past 17 years, I have lived at the above address in the North Cohasset area and gotten water from what has come to be the Mass-American Water Company instead of the Town of Cohasset. I have always regarded this as a real asset to my home and to this part of town. The reason is simple: Cohasset water just tastes bad. While you may disagree with this exact characterization, you know exactly what I'm talking about. Town water has a musty flavor that to me tastes as if someone had it stored in his basement for several years before offering it for sale to the public.

Let me tell you a true story. Not long after we moved into our home in 1985 we had some friends from town over. Friends who were on Town water. One of their children was thirsty and asked for a glass of water. Without a thought, I ran a glass from the kitchen faucet. He took one swallow and turned to his mother and said, "Mama, this water tastes GOOD!" Even a child can tell the difference.

I want to make this next point absolutely clear: my complaint is only an aesthetic one. I have no reason to think that Town water is not chemically and medically acceptable. However, this is, after all, the 21st century, and aesthetically poor water in a town of our size and affluence is unacceptable. I don't want it in my home direct from Town mains, and - since I don't know how much dilution it would take to make the taste unnoticeable - I don't want it mixed with the water I buy from Mass-American. I have contacted them to say so.

Haddad said. "I enjoy working in the town and look forward to being here in the future."

Selectman Merle Brown said the two sides met in executive session last week to discuss a possible raise. He said after jostling over the salary the selectmen and Haddad agreed on a three-year extension, paying Haddad $102,500 a year. While there is no raise built into the contract, Haddad said his salary will be up for review every year. While a contact hasn't been signed yet, Brown said an agreement has been reached.

"We talked with him and knew we wanted him to stay," Brown said. "It would have been foolhardy to let him go."

Cohasset is in the middle of major personnel changes including police chief, fire chief and DPW superintendent.

Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed said all selectmen felt Haddad was doing a good job and wanted him around in the future.

"We all individually expressed our desire for him to stick around," Koed said. "There's a general consensus that he's doing a good job with our budgets, bond ratings and in managing the town."

"It would have been foolhardy to let him go."

— Selectman Merle Brown

Haddad, who applied for the Dedham position in January, said the process moved very quickly in Dedham which contributed to the late date he pulled out. He said while there is presently a residency requirement for the position, Dedham selectmen assured him that could be waived.

"I just feel like the town (Cohasset) needed some stability," he said.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said Haddad has served the town well in the past five years and she looks forward to working with him in the future.

"I'm very happy he decided to stay," she said.

The Advisory Board met with the selectmen Tuesday night in executive session to discuss the contract. In an interview conducted before the session, Advisory Board Chairman Maureen Jerz said she didn't think the board would have a problem with the raise.

"We just wanted to be updated on what's going on," Jerz said.

The three finalists were chosen last month by a nine-member search committee. Thirty-four people applied for the Dedham job. Dedham is approximately triple the size of Cohasset and has a budget that is roughly double the size. Haddad's 15 years of professional experience as a town manager or town administrator was the most of the three finalists.

Neponset Valley Daily News reporter Peter Hartzel also contributed to this report.

Little Harbor sewer floated

ing the capacity of the Cohasset Wastewater Treatment Plant from 300,000 gallons-per-day to 450,000, and expanding the existing wastewater collection system to service Little Harbor and Atlantic Avenue sewer districts.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said no matter which way you slice the project, the town will need a Proposition 2-1/2 debt exclusion to finance the project.

"There is no way this project could be funded without an override," he said. In a five-year borrowing plan, this would add 11 cents to the tax rate in the first year which is approximately $62 to the average tax payer.

While the Sewer Commission understands the expense of the project, it feels that the cost will only balloon in the future. The board is also concerned that a project needs to be developed in order to satisfy a state court order which mandates the town solve its wastewater woes or faces fines.

"The main issue here is the timing of the project," said Gary Vanderweil, chairman of the Sewer Commission. "We have some momentum going and I'd like to sustain it."

Vanderweil added in a later interview that with the possible delayed funding of the School Building Assistance program he doesn't want to leave the town in dire straits.

"We would like to do our part to help the town," he said. "Practically speaking, the project could be delayed 12 months to a year."

Sewer Commissioner Ray Kasperowicz said it's his recommendation that the project be put off for some time.

"I think we need to proceed at a slower pace," he said. "We should be prudent and patient while examining this."

Another member of the Sewer Commission, Sean Cunning, said the state has been lenient so far, but wonders if it will continue that practice.

"We have this judgment from the state to solve our problem and one has to question if it will let us wait any longer," he said.

Selectman Michael Sullivan was concerned that the public has not had enough time to learn about the issue and even the two public hearings may not be enough.

Selectman Tom Callahan said there is no compelling need to do the project right away.

"I think before we do this we need to come up with a comprehensive plan for the whole town," he said.

Haddad said if the residents want to pay more taxes, then the sewer expansion could begin now.

The expansion will involve the sewering of about 450 "Equivalent Dwelling Units" utilizing a low-pressure sewer system, similar to that of North Cohasset sewer district. Homeowners will be responsible for their own "private property" installations, including installation of a grinder pump and pressure sewer. The estimated cost to each home is approximately $13,500 however, if you include the betterment, the price jumps to almost $36,000 if the user pays 100 percent for this project.

The sewering is expected to help to eliminate pollutants and contaminants from area on-site wastewater disposal systems which influence the water quality of Inner Little Harbor, Little Harbor and Massachusetts Bay.

Skippers survive

C.H.S. hockey team fends off surprising Feehan challenge to advance to semi-finals

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

It was not one of Cohasset's neat and tidy wins, where the outcome is determined well before the third period, and the JV skates out the remaining time. It was not one of Cohasset's prettiest wins either, as uncustomary last minute heroics were actually required from the Skippers.

Last Tuesday's 3-1 win over Bishop Feehan may not have looked like many thought it should have. But the bottom line is the Ice Skippers put themselves one step closer to a State Championship, with the South Sectional Semi-finals coming up tonight (6 p.m., Bridgewater Ice Arena).

"I think they can get a little more hockey in," said grinning long time coach Dennis Walsh, who would very much like to end his illustrious coaching career this winter with a state title. "We'll have to take it one game at a time."

Junior Greg O'Connell, the leading scorer in the South Shore League this year, opened the game, scoring off an assist from sophomore linemate Rob Carpenter a mere 33 seconds in.

Cohasset looked poised to extend the lead and turn their first playoff game of 2002 into a laugher. However, Feehan's outstanding goalie, AJ Goldman, denied 15 first period shots.

"I think they can get a little more hockey in. We'll have to take it one game at a time."
Cohasset High hockey coach Dennis Walsh

With six minutes left in the period, speedy Feehan winger Matt Olson broke free off a lead pass, and beat Cohasset senior goalie Dan Kinchla to even the score.

Cohasset clearly outplayed the Shamrocks for the first 15 minutes, collecting more than twice as many shots on net, but Goldman single-handedly kept his team in it.

After the break, Feehan came out of the locker room a different team. Suddenly, they became more aggressive going for the puck, and kept Cohasset from taking any shots for the first five minutes of the period.

Spring cleaning time

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE SPELLMAN

Time to honor the annual Spring cleaning custom by removing all of these yellow stickies off my monitor and recycling them into something productive: a long overdue column.

Do you believe in millionaires?....Yes!

OK, so the 2002 Olympic hockey experience wasn't near as compelling as the 1980 "Do you believe in miracles" ...well, miracle (of course, I will say the same thing for every sporting event I've witnessed before and since). However, if you're a true fan of this sport, how could you not be enthralled by what we witnessed over the last two weeks on Salt Lake City ice.

That, my friends, was hockey as it was intended to be played in all of it's wide open, pinball action passing, up and down glory. In place of the noxious neutral zone trap and ugly clutch and grab waltz the NHL has force fed us for lo these many winters were unfettered rushes and crisp puck movement.

Sure, the staggering skill level of the players involved and larger ice surface were considerable factors in the more aesthetically pleasing brand of play that was so prevalent in these Olympic games, but the more stringent calling of infractions and the elimination of the red line had just as big an impact, if not greater.

If this wasn't a slam dunk testimo-

Mite-C squad wins thriller

COASTAL STARS REPORT

For boxing fans the phenomenon of the main bout being overshadowed by the undercard is an all too common occurrence. Two weeks ago with the gold medal Olympic hockey game serving as the main event, a group of Mite level hockey fans were treated to a local undercard showdown between the Coastal Stars Mite C-3 team and Weymouth Mite 6 team.

The drama associated with this game started several weeks ago when the Stars finally eclipsed the first place Weymouth Mites after trailing them all season. As far as their division goes this has been a two man race all season and the Stars knew that if they were to capture the divisional crown and position themselves well for the playoffs they would have to go through Weymouth 6.

This was the last game of the season and the Stars entered it with a fragile one point lead over their bedeviling rivals . The first several minutes of the game was a microcosm of the entire season between these two foes as the momentum swung back and forth several times. Midway through the first the Stars broke the deadlock on a goal by the team's leading scorer Zach Robertshaw assisted by the team' s top point-getter, John Collins. Collins worked his way free from behind the net and found his cen-

Maitland a triple threat

Cohasset High senior a three-sport star

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Pete Maitland's athletic skills make him a valuable member of the Cohasset High soccer, basketball and track teams. But the intangibles he brings to those teams make him invaluable.

That's not to say Maitland is at all lacking in the athleticism department. He is consistently a top finisher in the 800 meter race. His toughness under the basket made him a leading rebounder for the Skippers despite his height (5-feet-10). His goal kicks, even in 30 degree weather, always make it past the 50 yard line on the fly. And in last Spring's track championships, he threw the javelin further than all but 16 high schoolers in all of New England.

For obvious reasons, Maitland's fellow seniors named him "Class Athlete" this past Homecoming.

Still, his coaches agree that what he brings to the team goes beyond his physical strengths. Within the past year, Maitland has captained all three of his varsity sports, including track as a junior.

"He had great leadership," praised Maitland's soccer coach, Dave Nigro. "It is a good thing as coach to have someone like that."

Maitland was one of Cohasset's top defenders in each of the last three seasons, all three teams qualifying for he state tourney. Nigro noted that he could always rely on Maitland to be a consistent force at the sweeper position, something the player clearly proved in earning a spot not only on the South Shore League All-Star team but also in the Eastern Mass All-Star game.

This past winter, Maitland made

Special Hitters' Workshop at SSBC in Hingham

HINGHAM - The South Shore Baseball Club will be offering a special Hitters' Workshop, featuring veteran SSBC instructor Rick DelVecchio, during the April School Vacation for players aged 8-13 at its indoor facility in Hingham. Sessions will be conducted from 9-10:45 a.m., Tuesday through Friday, Apr. 16-19.

Hitters' Workshops have been designed to directly focus on hitting and improve all aspects of a player's hitting. Lectures and drills are intended to create habits that will give hitters what they need to succeed in games.

"Due to the popularity of our Hitters' Workshops with Rick over the December and February school vacations," SSBC president/director Frank Niles, Jr. explained, "we felt that we had to add one for the April school vacation. This one is really geared for youth league players. You never know how often fields around here will be playable in April because of rain and cold. Players can get their at bats and receive instructions from SSBC's professional staff at this Hitters' Workshop."

The Hitters' Workshop features daily hitting lectures, five different hitting stations, various skills work and drills, live hitting cage with pitchers, soft toss and bunting stations, two live hitting stations, and a safety station for inside pitches.

SSBC is a year-round, full service club and training facility for baseball and softball players, boys and girls, ages five and older, with locations in Holbrook and Hingham. For more information about SSBC or any of its programs for members and non-members, call 1-800-GO4-HITS/781-767-1529 in Holbrook, 1-888-749-6466/781-749-6466 in Hingham, or visit its Web site at www.ssbc.com.

Mites win thriller

ter man, Robertshaw, in the slot. Robertshaw had no trouble converting the Collins pass by the helpless Weymouth goalie for the game's first goal.

The rest of the first period was a defensive showcase as goalie Chris Carpenter made several outstanding saves to keep Weymouth off the board. Supporting Carpenter in front of the net was the superlative work of defensemen Joe Parnell and Brendan Quackenbush. Head coach, Brian Geddes lauded Parnell and Quackenbush for their great ability to keep the puck in the offensive zone and the ease with which they were able to get the puck out of their defensive zone. Coach Geddes said their strong skating and tenacity were a factor all game and helped preserve the 1-0 lead going into the second period.

As the puck dropped to start the second the Stars immediately captured the momentum. It was the work of Robertshaw and Quackenbush aided by line mate Kevin Thomas that accounted for the second score. Collins once again got the puck to Robertshaw who dished it off to Thomas who blasted the puck by the usually steady Weymouth goalie.

There were several close calls in this period that might have changed the direction of the game quite abruptly. Near the end of the second period, holding on to a 2-0 lead, a Weymouth forward broke free and was heading for a breakaway. The Weymouth player was chased down by the incredible hustling and back checking of second line center Allie Ryan who caught the winger forcing him wide thus enabling the defensive pairing of Chris Bjorkman and Sarah Evans to take care of the play from there by clearing the puck out of their zone. Assistant coach Bill Quackenbush was not surprised by the sensational play as Evans, Bjorkman and Ryan have hustled all year and know the meaning of team defense.

Another close call in the second was a near miss by Allie Ryan as she almost broke in alone on the Weymouth net minder. The gritty Marshfield forward Kevin Meehan's aggressive fore-checking pushed the puck out of the zone and nudged it free to line mate Brian DeBesse who got it over to Ryan for the near miss.

As the third period began the Stars knew that with this Weymouth team they couldn't get complacent with a two goal lead. And sure enough on the first shift of the final period Weymouth reminded the Stars why they were such a formidable foe all season as they scored their first goal a minute into the third period. Three and a half minutes later it was a tie ball game as Weymouth knocked in an uncovered rebound for their second goal.

Coach Geddes along with assistant coaches Quackenbush and the highly heralded instructional coach, Charlie Parnell, implored their team not to tighten up and play their disciplined defensive game and the offensive opportunities would come. Sure enough at the thirteen minute mark of the third the Stars went ahead as Kevin Thomas fired a shot top shelf glove side for the go ahead goal.

Protecting a slim one goal lead, the prowess of the Stars' third line revealed itself on a brilliant goal by center Joe Admirand. Admirand's deftness with his hands and a clever deeking move put the Stars up by two. The third line's defense anchored by the Cohasset pairing of Coleman Hernon and E.J. Culhane was solid all game. Hernon was a stalwart on defense and made a critical move to keep the puck in the offensive zone on Admirand's goal. Culhane was a force on both sides of the ice with his consistent smart play and aggressiveness. The play of forwards John Ryan and Andrew Geddes created several threats as Geddes drilled two shots dead on forcing the Weymouth goalie to make a couple of show stopping saves.

With ten seconds left in the game Robertshaw put the game away completing his hat trick and putting the Stars firmly in first place and giving them the number one seed in the playoffs.

came at the nine-minute mark when Olson's linemate, Brian Sherry, beat Eric Libby at the blue line for a clean shot.

Kinchla managed to deflect the wrister, then cover up the rebound attempt of Olson. He finished the game with 20 saves on 21 shots.

With three minutes remaining in the period, Cohasset began shooting through their four offensive lines, massing a vicious attack. But all eight of the shots the Skippers put on net during those final three minutes were thwarted by Goldman (44 saves on the day).

Feehan clearly had momentum going its way heading into the second break, but the number one seeded Skippers showed their top form in the final period.

Junior Tom Anderson weaved through two Shamrock defenders at the blue line, barely remaining onside, and flicked a wrist shot past Goldman to the bottom right corner with 8:37 remaining.

Feehan came back, hitting the crossbar once and the post twice on blueline slapshots. With a final desperation move, Bishop Feehan pulled Goldman with a minute left, only to watch O'Connell loft the puck into the open net from the opposite blueline.

Many believed that this game would not even be close, that it would serve as nothing more than a tune-up for Bourne this Thursday. But the Skippers have made the Frozen Four of the South Sectional, and that's the bottom line.

nial to convince the NHL powers-that-be to finally drop the two-line pass rule and instruct their zebras to call a tighter game, I dare say nothing ever will be.

I've said it in this space before: there's no sporting event more enjoyable to watch in person than a well played, competitive hockey game. It's a pity the NHL hasn't cashed in on the all too simple premise of just letting the players play.

The most wonderful time of the year

Forget Christmas time. For my money, this is the best month of the year, hands down. First, pitchers and catchers report, then you've got the high school tourneys for hockey and basketball commencing, and that's followed by the NCAA hoops tourney.

Speaking of the meat in the middle of that tantalizing sports sandwich:

The Norwell boys hoop team, which was knocked off by neighboring Scituate in the Div. 3 semifinals Tuesday night at Braintree High in a thrilling overtime affair, was the most physically talented team, 1 through 7, I've seen in a couple of years, and that includes the Div. 1 teams I've covered. Scary to think the Clippers return six of their top eight players next season, including legit Div. 1 college prospect Gerry Corcoran, a junior.

The 6-foot-5 Corcoran had a few running mates who'd have been stars on other teams in Bobby Savoy, who won't be back, and John Mohan, who will. Additionally, there were a few absolutely ideal role players. Senior captain Savoy was one of the fastest and best defending guards in the history of the South Shore League and he did a pretty fair job running the offense too. Mohan is as well rounded and intelligent a high school player as there is around. It's truly frightening to think what he might be doing two years from now when he's a senior. Fellow soph Marc Bowman is a 6-foot-6 shot-blocking machine and senior Ted Hughes was this team's version of Caldwell Jones (yes, I realize I'm showing my age with this reference). Hughes' hard hat, lunch pail and who-cares-if-I-see-the-ball at the offensive end approach to his power forward role was just what this perimeter oriented team needed.

And then coach John Willis could bring in off the bench multi-talented juniors Craig Sutherland and long range specialist Joe Doyle, who surprised absolutely no one by winning the three-point shooting contest at the South Shore League-Patriot League All-Star game two weeks ago (he hit eight in a row in one first round stretch). These two players should step relatively seamlessly into the starting lineup next year, and solid swingman Frank Granara (who missed the stretch run and post-season after suffering a broken leg) should be among the better sixth men in the SSL.

- This potential level of dominance might also be witnessed in the South Sectionals from the Cohasset High hockey team (19-0-1 and having outscored opponents 153-19 this season) or Abington girls hoops team (20-1), especially now that standout Steph Morrissey appears to have recovered from an injury suffered in the regular season finale.

If the Hingham hockey squad stayed in the Div. 1 south sectionals, I might well have included them on this select list, but no way with the jump to the Super 8 tourney. Of course, if they pull off a win here, that would be The Sports Story of the year in Marinerland. Kudos to Garrett Reagan and his charges for not shying off of this supreme challenge.

- Then there's everyone's favorite darkhorse, the Rockland boys hoop team (13-5), the 10th seed in the Div. 3 south tourney (which would have been much higher if not for season ending losses to powerhouse Cardinal Spellman and Norwell). With three stars from last year's sectional finalist squad lost to graduation and starting senior captain Eric Savicke going down mid-season with a serious leg injury, venerable coach Bob Fisher did some of the best coaching in his storied high school career by first directing this group to defend its share of the Patriot League title with just one loss in 12 league games, and now leading them into the Div. 3 semifinal match against Wareham last night after a huge upset of second seeded Abington.

And while I'm on the subject…

…of Cohasset High sports, how do they keep doing this!?!

With a student body of just over 300, by far the smallest of any of the Pilgrim Conference's 29 memberships schools, how is it the Cohasset boys have, in the last nine months alone, won the South Shore League track title, advanced the lacrosse team to the Div. 2 state championship game, won the SSL football crown and finished second in SSL soccer with a 13-4-1 record.

And then there's this winter's exploits, which might be the most impressive of all. First, Torin Sweeney gets mostly freshman and sophomores on his 24-man wrestling team, loses his team captain and undisputed top grappler from 2001in Dan Littauer, and goes on to finish unbeaten in Pilgrim Conference 2 competition, then takes fourth at sectionals. It simply defies the odds that hockey coach Dennis Walsh could even find enough athletic bodies to form four virtually interchangeable forward lines, five top of the line defensemen and an all-star goalie, never mind put it all together to outscore opponents by a total of 153-19 this season.

Shorts shots

- Speaking of the Olympics, I was stunned…STUNNED, I tell you, to hear the suggestion that figure skating judges were trading votes. Though not quite as STUNNED as I was a few weeks ago to discover there may be a pretty fair amount of nepotism involved in state government hiring.

- More than a month later, I still can't get enough Patriots talk. So I'm thinking I've past the expiration date for this statement being deemed hyperbole: aside from the Miracle on Ice, this Patriots Super Bowl win was easily the most compelling sporting event I've ever viewed on television.

- Scituate goalie Joe Duggan got absolutely robbed of a spot on the Patriot League all-star team. Granted, selectees John Lynch (1.06 goals against per game) and Mike Zarella (1.71)— who tended goal for the much more talented Hingham and Duxbury teams, respectively—had far gaudier totals than Duggan (3.2), but I'd be willing to bet the save percentage numbers are pretty comparable (unfortunately, with volunteer stat people, this is pretty tough to confirm at the high school level). Regardless of what conclusions one might draw from numbers, however, I'd laugh in the face of anyone who told me any goalie in this league meant more to their team than Duggan, a junior, meant to the Sailors. In fact, I might also suggest they talk to the Russian Olympic Committee about a future in figure skating judging.

Finally, a few insuppressible Sox thoughts:

The door can't hit the Duke on the hind quarters hard enough for my liking, but Joe Kerrigan deserves at least the better part of this season to sink or swim. Forget the way last season ended and the gripe that players quit on Kerrigan. If they stopped trying, they gave up on themselves, their teammates and the fans. They're professional athletes. It's madness to suggest we hold Manager's accountable for the players' level of commitment.

Putting all other arguments aside, I say Kerrigan gets a shot simply on the basis of his track record of handling pitchers. Clearly, Pedro is going to need a little TLC and a lot of adept "handling" in the early going.

Of course, all support will be withdrawn if Pedro goes over 90 pitches anytime before mid-May. I don't care how much he bulked up the area around the shoulder, a rotator cuff fray does not heal on its own. The Sox have enough talent to contend for a wild card even without Pedro. Let's preserve him as best we can for the stretch run and (please, please, please) the post-season

- Methinks some folks might be getting a trifle carried away over what the signing of Tony Clark means to the Red Sox. The 6-foot-7 slugger has always hit well at Fenway, but he's been plagued by back problems in recent years and he's hit only 29 homers over the last two seasons in 636 at bats, while striking out 159 times over that stretch. Is it obvious I've been burned by him in rotisserie baseball a few times?

- My darkhorse to wind up hitting in that five-hole (with Clark possibly dropping down the order) by season's end, protecting Manny and Nomar, is Shea Hillenbrand…that is, if, as reports indicate, he is ready to be considerably more selective at the plate this season. The kid has got a great stroke

- I'm a big fan of the Rey Sanchez (a great roto sleeper for me a few years back, incidentally) signing, mostly because he edges Monsieur Awfulman a step closer to the door, but also because he's someone who can step in for an extended stretch at short if Nomar should suffer a setback.

- In the grand scheme of things, Manny's missing the first day of camp doesn't amount to a hill of beans to the team or himself as a ballplayer. To the New England fans, however, who just witnessed first hand what can happen when a team truly pulls together (y'know, the Patriots), it might well mean a lot. If he had shown up on time, the Fenway faithful might have given Manny, a notorious slow starter (last season being the aberration), a month or so of so so swings before getting on his back. The potential for tolerance now, however, appears as scarce as he was on Day 1 of camp.

a tremendous jump for the basketball team, evolving from a JV swinger as a junior to a South Shore League All-Star as a senior. Maitland attributes his success simply to getting an opportunity to show his skills.

"I felt much more comfortable (this season)," said Maitland. "Last year, I would go in for a minute, then get taken out if I made a mistake. I just had a lot more fun this year."

In addition to the force he provided under the hoop, he emerged as a potent long-range threat, one of the team leaders in three-pointers this season.

Basketball coach Ron Ford was extremely proud of the leadership role Maitland assumed in a year where the numbers were way down due to injuries.

"He saw and opportunity and he seized it," said the 11 year head coach. "He grew so much this year."

Despite the extremely impressive resumes in both soccer and basketball, spring clearly remains Maitland's best season. A second year captain, Maitland has a good shot at leading the team to a second straight South Shore League title this upcoming sports season. However, the league should have much stiffer competition in 2002, with Abington and Carver always putting together tough teams, and Mashpee, last year's State Champions, entering into SSL competition.

Maitland hopes to repeat as a New England Championships athlete in javelin, where he could finish much higher than last year. His longest throw in 2001, 179-plus feet, would have put Maitland in the top five at the New Englands.

Maitland has been talking to several college coaches who are interested in him possibly for soccer or track. UMass-Amherst (which already has accepted him), Boston University, University of Rhode Island, and Trinity all stand as perspective choices.

However, Maitland knows he still has some time to impress the Cohasset fans before moving on to bigger and better things.

"I just want to have as much fun and success in track as I can before it is all over," he noted.

Shipyard video has far-reaching effect

Film airs on Channel 2

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

A documentary featuring Hingham Shipyard at the height of its glory during World War II is making waves across the country.

The film, entitled "Remembering the Hingham Shipyard," is getting wider publicity as it airs March 8 at 7 p.m. and March 9 at 10:30 a.m. on WGBH-Channel 2, during pledge week.

"That's very exciting, because they're not only showing the video but also offering copies of the film as part of their pledge incentives," said Martin Cohn, spokesperson for shipyard developer Paul Trendowicz. "That will give more exposure to the wonderful history and accomplishments of the shipyard as we're coming upon the 60th anniversary of the war."

Copies of the documentary, narrated by former Hingham resident and well-known radio personality Jess Cain, are available for a symbolic $19.42.

Cohn isn't sure from whom WGBH heard about "Remembering the Hingham Shipyard."

"They receive tapes from all over and chose this one on its artistic merits," he said. "WGBH must also believe the video will provide an incentive for people to make contributions to generate revenue for Channel 2."

Those making a $60 pledge will receive a copy of the video.

Some individuals and families across the nation have already viewed the tape.

"We got a letter from a former Hingham resident now living in another state who was thrilled when he saw it, because the tape brought back so many memories," Cohn said. "The film has really stimulated a lot of discussion and goodwill."

Bill Copeland, who was a pipe-fitter at the Hingham Shipyard during WWII; Peg Charlton, local author and historian who is a member of the Hingham Shipyard Historical Foundation Advisory Committee; and narrator Jess Cain get together during last July's screening of the documentary "Remembering Hingham Shipyard." At left, Ian Menzies of Hingham – one of the stars of the film – is on the screen.

A number of other individuals currently residing in various parts of the United States have also had a positive reaction to the 30-minute documentary, "Remembering the Hingham Shipyard," according to Cohn.

The film, a living history sponsored by the shipyard developers and Hingham Shipyard Historical Foundation, brings the war years to life while at the same time offering an inspirational message of industry, pride, sacrifice and patriotism.

The foundation was started by Capt. Mark Hirsch to commemorate the events that took place at the shipyard during World War II and the men and women who were instrumental in building and launching ships during the conflict.

Orders for the film, which vividly recaptures the bustle of military activity at the shipyard during World War II, now total more than 500. Most of the sales have come about by word of mouth.

Information about the videotape was also mailed to graduates of the Class of 1945 and a number of former Hingham residents living either locally or in other parts of the country.

During wartime, the close-knit Hingham community was transformed into a busy military naval center — one of the largest shipbuilding operations in the nation.

It was at Bethlehem Hingham Shipyard that masses of workers produced 227 top-notch ships used in the war effort.

A gala premiere showing of the film took place in the giant General Services Administration Building, where the shipbuilding operation was headquartered, in July. The documentary met with rave reviews.

"Remembering Hingham Shipyard" details the rich history of the facility with a very personal touch. A number of current Hingham residents who took part in the effort or lived in Hingham during the war share their vivid recollections of the effects the wartime period had on the once sleepy seaside community.

Post-prom party plans underway

The post prom party committee would like to thank the Cohasset Jack Conway office and Paul Trendowicz for graciously stepping forward and providing storage for numerous post prom party equipment and props while Cohasset High School is being renovated. Thanks to Tim Baird for coordinating and moving all the "stuff" and also thank you to the school administration for once again providing the high school gym for the night's festivities.

Plans are already underway for the post prom party 2002! This is the fifth year of a continuing parent and community effort to give our seniors and their guests a fun, safe, alcohol and drug-free event.

The high school gym will once again be transformed into our "top-secret" theme on prom night May 31. Past years have had the seniors "under the stars", at "Mardi Gras", on a "cruise ship", and "under the Boardwalk." There's dancing, prizes, plenty of food, and all sorts of non-stop activities to help celebrate a memorable night. The party begins right after prom and continues until 5 a.m. Post prom party has been so successful that we've had a 95 to 100 percent attendance rate. The Cohasset Police support the parents and community in their effort to keep the kids safe.

Why not help the tradition grow? The post prom party is truly a gift that the whole community gives our seniors. Become involved...it's fun, creative, you'll meet new people and it's rewarding. For more information contact Jeanne Quigley at 781-383-1573.

BUSINESS

New cosmetic boutique will fill Laura Ashley vacancy

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

The impending arrival of train service in Hingham Square, while daunting to some, isn't stopping new businesses from taking up shop.

Entrepreneurs Hillary Woodyatt of Hingham and Jane Forrer of Cohasset took their cue from business owners like Patti Kane, owner of the new Square Café, in deciding to establish their innovative new cosmetics boutique, Across the Pond, on nearby South Street.

"We've taken the traditional way women buy cosmetics and turned it absolutely up-side-down," said Woodyatt.

Both women have done a great deal of research into what they consider to be the best skin care and cosmetics products "out there."

"We've chosen the top ones and will be bringing them into a boutique atmosphere where customers can play with a number of different lines, allowing them to mix and match," Woodyatt said. "It's really about making people feel beautiful, because if they look at themselves that way, they'll feel more comfortable and better about themselves."

The companies they've selected are family-based New York or Paris companies which produce their products in small batches, staying with the original formulas.

The focus will be on proper cleansing while at the same time adding color.

"The color lines we'll offer will provide a quick fix, but healthy skin is a process and involves a commitment," Woodyatt said. "We've already done the research for our customers and simplified their choices."

Across the Pond, which is expected to open in early April, will provide an atmosphere conducive to browsing, while at the same time offering quality, hands-on assistance.

"We're taking away the individual product kiosks found in department stores and making it very open so customers can 'play' with different products," said Forrer, who has lived in Cohasset for 11 years.

Across the Pond will also offer a limited selection of loungewear.

The shop's name came from an old-fashioned term for crossing the Atlantic — "across the pond."

"We kept going across the pond, so to speak, when making our choices of which products to carry," Forrer said, "whether ones from New York or Paris."

Trained make-up artists will be on-hand to perform makeovers and answer questions.

Although a small number of similar businesses have been popping up in other areas, particularly near New York City, cosmetic boutiques are still considered to be a cutting-edge industry.

A mix of skin care products that are either botanically derived or sea-based (derived from plants that come from the ocean) will be offered in the Hingham boutique.

With regard to the likelihood that Greenbush rail service will be restored, Woodyatt notes that a number of shops are being renovated in the area, despite those predictions.

"Hingham Square will be here for a long time and will continue to thrive, although it may be uncomfortable for everyone for a little while."

Forrer seconds that opinion.

"We'll all ride the wave together and be floating in the end," she said with a laugh. "The time is right to do it, so we're coming in, train or no train."

When their search for a location for their new shop brought them to Hingham Square, Woodyatt and Forrer immediately felt support from other shop owners.

"We wanted to be bring something to Hingham and the South Shore that would complement other businesses and bring more people to the Square without competing with existing ones," Forrer said. "Besides, the Square is charming."

When the two women learned Laura Ashley was moving from its current location, they knew their search for the perfect spot had come to an end.

"We want people to come to our store, visit the other shops and then go and have dinner — all in the Square," said Forrer.

The women are working with Cohasset decorator Jill Tedeschi to create a warm, comfortable decor in their shop that's friendly and simple.

Cohasset's Jane Forrer, left, and Hillary Woodyatt and are owners of "Across the Pond," a new cosmetics boutique in Hingham Square.

"We don't want anyone to feel intimidated," Woodyatt said. "It will be like buying lipstick from a girlfriend."

There will be something for everyone in Across the Pond, according to Forrer.

"Our products are ageless and genderless," she said, ranging from perfume, gift baskets and cellulite and wrinkle creams to anti-acne lotions, lip gloss and a men's skin care line.

"Many of our products are used by a number of movie stars," she notes, "although we didn't make that correlation in the beginning."

Product lines that will be carried by Across the Pond include Laura Mercier, Trish, McEvoy, Darphin, Bliss, Phytomer, Creed and Paula Dorf.

According to the shop owners, Dorf started her career doing Barbra Streisand's makeup, while one of Creed's top-selling fragrances was created especially for Grace Kelly.

Both shop owners and staff will undergo intensive training from the individual product line companies.

"It's all about the way you feel and what customers want to prevent, enhance, hide, take care of or correct," Forrer said. "Beauty is not a quick fix. It has a lot to do with health and lifestyle, and we want to simplify the process and educate our clients."

Forrer and Woodyatt have worked together previously on various projects and look forward to doing so again.

"It seemed like a natural fit, because we have similar lifestyles," Woodyatt said. "We both work, have children and live in the same area. And we work well together."

Popular salon celebrates first anniversary

Also named to 'inner circle'

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Hair getting a little long? Color not quite right? You're living in the right town.

Adrian Morris Salon, 103 Ripley Road, which is celebrating its first anniversary, has been recognized by John Paul Mitchell as one of its top salons.

John Paul Mitchell recently named the salon to its "inner-circle" which is based on product sales.

"The inner circle means the salon is very dedicated to John Paul Mitchell and supports the company and its philosophies," said Ellen Bobrow, regional vice-president of New England operations.

Being in the inner circle means that the salon will always have the latest Paul Mitchell products stocked on its shelves.

"Customers can be assured that an inner circle salon will provide them with the best that John Paul Mitchell has to offer," Bobrow said.

Adrian Morris, owner of the salon, says he believes customer service is what has kept his salon operating at such a high level over the past year.

"We go above and beyond other salons to make sure every visit is an experience," he said. "We have an exceptional staff that provides first-class service."

Floor manager Lynda Hague said some women might be intimidated entering a salon but at Adrian Morris, the atmosphere is very inviting.

"The reason people enjoy the salon so much is it is so friendly and comforting," she said. "The staff here treats everyone like they are family."

The salon draws customers from all over the South Shore and Morris said some even make the trek from as far away as New Hampshire and Connecticut for his services.

The salon provides a variety of services but Morris said 98 percent of his business involves coloring.

Morris has been in the business for 14 years and said he became involved because his mother was a hairdresser.

"It's a passion for me," he said. "I love everything about the business."

Morris said his goals for the salon include opening another store along with starting a school for hair stylists.

No snow, no worries

Winter warmth didn't melt Blue Hills' ski season

By Amy Lambiaso
CORRESPONDENT

Ski resorts in New England should have been in trouble this season following record-low levels of precipitation and record high temperatures.

Tell that to Blue Hills Ski Area in Canton.

While many mountains in the area have only been able to open half of the trails for use as compared to past years, Blue Hills has been riding high on the success of new ski and snowboard programs and its new rental shop which opened Feb. 16.

Part of the ski area's secret to success is knowing its customers — many of whom are new to the sport — and meeting their needs.

"We're not a big enough mountain to be competitive with the ski areas in New Hampshire and Vermont," Director of Communications for Blue Hills, Bryan Eckert said. "But we offer great facilities and programs for people who are learning to ski."

Despite unseasonably warm weather and very little natural snowfall, the new owners and operators of Blue Hills — who also operate Ragged Mountain resort in Danbury, N.H. — went forward with planned improvements this season, including a 30 percent increase in the ski area's snowmaking ability. That has allowed the area to remain open, albeit with only two trails going into February and March.

"Temperatures have been dropping down enough at night, so we have been able to make plenty of snow," Eckert said. "And now we're finally getting Mother Nature's help."

The learn-to-ski program and beginner hills at Blue Hills is a local draw to high schools and area kids who are learning to ski and snowboard. But this year they are taking a new turn.

The real draw to the mountain was the Big Air snowboarding series new this season. The first Pro/Am snowboarding series in the Boston area will give top pros a chance to showboat their talents, along with others willing to give it a shot. Blue Hills Big Air contest is mainly for snowboarders, but Eckert said that there are always a few skiers who come out and get into the freestyle competition.

"It's a lot of fun to see what they can do," Eckert said. "It's pretty unbelievable to see how much air some of them can get, even the skiers."

The Big Air competitions are held on Thursday nights at 7 p.m. and wrap up March 7 . And so far the contests have been a popular draw for both competitors and spectators. People are really getting into it, Eckert said.

"That's one of the best things about snowboarding," Tyler Moak, a local snowboarding bum said. "Even if you're not going down yourself, it's fun to watch."

Moak started snowboarding four years ago, but wishes he had started when he was much younger like more kids are now.

"If you're under 20, you're not getting skis for Christmas anymore, you're getting a snowboard," Eckert said. "It just seems to be the wilder thing to do."

But the huge manmade jumps in the mountain for the snowboarding junkies aren't the wildest thing at Blue Hills. That has yet to come. A new event will hold that title for this season, an event where people will actually head down the mountain in kayaks. Yes, the same kayaks used in water. Blue Hills will sponsor a Kamakaze Kayak Race on March 9 for anyone with the daredevil attitude needed to participate.

"I've never been in one of these races, and I've never even seen them," Eckert said. "But I've heard enough about them to know it's a great time for everyone."

The season will conclude on March 23 with the mountain's Spring Fling. An all day event, the largest trail will be marked with an obstacle course for all those taking part. Prizes will be given out all day, most of which will be found at the bottom of a Jell-o jump, in which no skis are needed. Truly a day for all, filled with surprises, Eckert said.

"These final two events are a great way to end a season that has already been a season of new and great things."

Drawing inspiration from the North River

By Gregory Mathis
GMATHIS@CNC.COM

By her own admission, Liz Haywood-Sullivan was a "Jack of all trades, master of none."

Until 1996, Haywood-Sullivan's career had taken her from an industrial designer at Xerox to an independent exhibit design consultant to president and owner of her own graphic design company with her husband. While she enjoyed success in those endeavors, she said she felt something was missing.

"As a designer I was jumping all over the place," Haywood-Sullivan said as she hammered another nail into the downstairs wall at the James Library in Norwell. "I was a mediocre designer… I was OK."

Essentially she was working for other people, creating images that would please clients. Her work, she said, was lacking personal satisfaction.

All that changed in 1996 when her husband took a new job and Haywood-Sullivan decided to journey down a new career path.

"It's taken five years and every year my work continues to improve," Haywood-Sullivan said last week as she hung her paintings in the gallery at The James Library and Center for the Arts. Her exhibit, titled "North River Marsh: A Yearlong Homage," has been a year-long labor of love for the Marshfield Hills resident.

"This is the most satisfying work I've ever done in my life," Haywood-Sullivan said. "This is what I'm supposed to be doing. This is what my life's work is supposed to be."

The inspiration of the 27-piece show is the North River, its tributaries and the landscape that surrounds the river. It is a subject Haywood-Sullivan continues to draw inspiration from.

"I'm still not finished painting it," she said. "It's just a beautiful natural resource with so many different faces and personalities."

The 27 paintings are done exclusively in soft pastel, which has been Haywood-Sullivan's medium of choice since she began working as a fine artist in 1996.

Liz Haywood-Sullivan hangs work featured in her new exhibit "North River Marsh: A Yearlong Homage," on display at the James Library and Center for the Arts in Norwell. The show will be on display through April 4.

"I welcomed the challenge of working strictly in one medium and seeing how far I could take it," said Haywood-Sullivan, who used an extensive range of artistic and design principles in her previous career as a designer.

She also welcomed the challenge of limiting her subject matter to the North River marshes.

"As opposed to being limiting, this self-imposed assignment has allowed me to explore deeper into my technique," Haywood-Sullivan discovered. "By being freed from the burden of choosing subject matter, there has been more opportunity to experiment with papers, underpainting — which I rarely did before and use almost exclusively now — stroke technique, and composition."

Marshfield pastel artist Liz Haywood-Sullivan captures views of the North River Marsh in 27 different works in her James Library show.

The experimentation led to paintings that surprised even herself.

"I'm clueless when I sit down to paint… I don't have a lot of control over what happens. It's a very intuitive process for me," Haywood-Sullivan said. "I just paint it and put it out there."

Haywood-Sullivan said she's just beginning to tap into her talent as a fine artist.

"I'm really just getting started," she said, "but I'm taking the tiger by the tail."

The last year has been spent preparing for the show at The James Library and Haywood-Sullivan said she's excited about the initial feedback she's received.

"I'm just thrilled everyone is enjoying looking at my work," she said. "This is my anecdote to terrorism… to remind people there is beauty in the world and peace in the world. These paintings are like little meditations."

Haywood-Sullivan said she wanted to offer more to the viewer in this exhibit than just a gallery full of paintings. She wanted to enlighten them as well.

"I'm an educator at heart," Haywood-Sullivan said. "I'm addicted to learning things."

In addition to the 27 pastel paintings there will be historical information about the river and background information about the paintings, including thumbnail sketches and photos and notes.

"I have attended a handful of exhibits — in particular a Van Gogh exhibit in Amsterdam and a Rodin exhibit in Washington, D.C. — that stood out because they offered the artists' letters and sketchbooks for examination… a doorway to the artists' minds and methodology," Haywood-Sullivan said. "By including historical and background in my show I hope to demystify and illuminate the process and how my art is created."

Haywood-Sullivan said she is happy to have the opportunity to share her artwork locally.

"I love the venue. The James Library and Center for the Arts," Haywood-Sullivan said. "The people here are terrific. The location, the subject matter, the gallery, they're all part of the same whole I'm trying to mold and manipulate."

Beet Soup

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

I say "beet soup" and you say, "no thanks." Well, maybe that is because you have had a particularly dreadful version of borscht, a recipe that ranges from a cold, lifeless purée to a hearty, working man's meat soup. When I think of beet soup, however, I think of the jewel of root vegetables – bright in color and flavor and uniquely suited to exciting ingredient combinations.

The first question was how to cook the beets so I roasted the first batch and then simmered the second round in chicken stock. The roasted beet variation had a deeper and more intense flavor. Now I wanted to perfect the method. I found that peeling the beets first and then cutting them into 1-inch chunks allowed the juices to caramelize in the high heat oven thus producing more flavor. I also tested salting them before cooking which also improved the taste. Covering the beets for most of the cooking time prevented them from drying out although a brief period uncovered towards the end of baking concentrated the flavor. As for oven temperature, 425 degrees was best – at higher temperatures the beets took on a dark, roasted flavor that was overpowering.

Thinking that the soup could use some thickening, I tried adding half of a cooked, starchy potato as well as cooked rice. Neither was necessary; the soup was fine on its own. As for aromatics, I tested onion, celery, carrot, garlic, leek, and shallot and settled on just the onion for a simple, non-intrusive flavor. As for other flavors, cumin seeds paired with ginger were a perfect marriage with the beets – vibrant, earthy, and sharp. Toasting the cumin seeds in a small skillet really boosted the flavor. I also added lime juice and honey to further enhance the competition between sweet and sour.

Since borscht is usually served with sour cream, I wanted to test the addition of dairy. Yogurt was too tart. A half cup of heavy cream was nice – it adds a velvety smoothness – but I also liked the soup without it. For a garnish, sour cream does work well as suggested by thousands of classic recipes.

BEET SOUP WITH TOASTED CUMIN AND GINGER

Smaller beets tend to have more flavor than larger ones although they take a bit more time to peel.

1 1/2 teaspoons cumin seeds
2 pounds beets, about 10 medium (two inches in diameter)
2 1/2 tablespoons vegetable oil
1/2 teaspoon salt
2 medium onions, roughly chopped
2 tablespoons minced ginger
6 cups chicken stock, low sodium or homemade preferred
1 1/2 tablespoons honey
2 tablespoons lime juice
1/2 cup heavy cream, optional
Freshly ground pepper to taste
Minced chives for garnish, optional
Sour cream for garnish, optional

1. Heat oven to 425 degrees. Rinse beets, trim tops and bottoms, peel and cut into one-inch chunks. Toss in a roasting pan with one tablespoon of the oil and sprinkle them with 1/4 teaspoon salt. Cover with aluminum foil and roast for 30 minutes. Remove foil and continue to cook for about 10 minutes or until the beets are cooked through. Place the cumin seeds in a non-stick skilled and toast over medium heat until they darken and are very aromatic, about 3 minutes.

2. Heat the remaining 1 1/2 tablespoons oil in a soup pot or large saucepan. Add the onions and cook, stirring frequently, for about 5 minutes, until they have softened but not browned. Add the ginger and toasted cumin seeds and cook for an additional 2 minutes.

3. Add the stock and remaining 1/4 teaspoon salt to the pot and bring to a boil. Reduce heat to maintain a simmer, cover, and cook for 15 minutes. Add beets and simmer for 5 minutes longer.

4. Puree the soup in a blender or food processor in batches. Return to the pot and add the honey, lime, and optional heavy cream and bring back to a simmer. Adjust seasonings with salt and pepper. Ladle into bowls and garnish with optional chives and sour cream if desired.

Closer to Rod

Weymouth club welcomes Stewart look-alike

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

"Simply Rod" is how tribute artist A.R. Himsey is known.

On stage, belting out "Da Ya Think I'm Sexy" or "Crazy About Her," he simply transforms himself into Rod Stewart.

"My shows are perfected to the style of the legendary performer, from his voice to his hair to his savoir fare," Himsey said.

Himsey, a native of the Bay State, spent years perfecting the style of the rock 'n roll icon.

"I choreograph every day. I watch how he walks, how he struts, how he projects his charisma. And I kick out a soccer ball like him," Himsey said.

Most importantly, he masters the voice.

"You have to get the rasp just right," Himsey said.

Himsey brings his unmistakable look and voice to Weymouth's Odyssey Club, 1073 Main St. (Route 18), on Friday, March 15, in two 50-minute performances, beginning at 9:30 p.m.

If you stop by, don't expect to see Himsey for a short time before the show begins.

Transformation takes time and soul.

"I need 20 minutes by myself to physically, emotionally and spiritually change," Himsey said.

Himsey believes stepping so completely into the persona of Rod Stewart is the ultimate tribute a fan can give.

"They say that imitation is the highest compliment you can pay to someone. I think being able to transform into that person is the highest complement," Himsey said.

From the time he was in grade school, friends noticed Himsey resembled the famous singer.

In 1971, as a boy of 10, Himsey was awed by Stewart's "Maggie May."

Rod Stewart impersonator A. R. Himsey

"I thought to myself, 'I look like that, but I could never sound like that.' How could anybody sound like Rod? Then, at about 17, I decided to get the voice down," Himsey said.

Gradually the vision came into view.

When Karaoke first came out, Himsey found himself on stage, simply being Rod. Out of this came his first job offer as a celebrity impersonator. Then came work with agencies.

"I auditioned for a few impersonator companies, sent my promo kit and they hired me," Himsey said.

Then he decided to go out on his own. Himsey both performs with a five-piece band and does solo performances. He now gets a lot of calls to perform at birthdays and weddings.

He often seeks out spots he'd like to play.

"I do a lot of cold walk-ins. I am very persistent in what I want to do," Himsey said.

Himsey is as dedicated to the Rod Stewart "look" as to the voice.

He patronizes a Rhode Island hairdresser who is now well-versed in the Stewart cut and spends a lot of time on wardrobe.

"I go well out of my way for my outfits. I have just about every outfit Rod Stewart owns. I have suits made for me, and I order from International Male. I have clothes mailed from England," Himsey said.

The effort has paid off. Last year, a national television personality acknowledged Himsey's resemblance to Stewart. Himsey's photograph had a cameo appearance when Jay Leno held it up to the camera, commenting Himsey looked just like Stewart.

Himsey hopes another special appearance is in his future.

"I love Rod. My goal and my dream is to someday sing with Rod Stewart on stage," Himsey said.

Pruning basics for trees and shrubs

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Dainty blossoms of glistening white snowdrops dangle from tufts of delicate stems alongside my woodland path. Birds sing in the treetops and the buds of shrubs and trees are beginning swell. Nearby, clusters of deep yellow crocuses create a stunning contrast to the exquisite violet-blue blooms of dwarf iris reticulata, their fragrant flowers a sure sign of spring's arrival. Emerging clumps of daffodil foliage push their way through the soft earth producing curious mounds as the pointed leaves lift leaf litter and matted mulch in their quest for sunlight. A record-breaking warm winter season promises to deliver an especially early spring.

My spring cleanup is underway. Mild temperatures and the surge of new growth have produced a sense of urgency to tidy the borders while the majority of plants remain dormant. Weeds and wildflowers are beginning to flower and last year's weed seeds have started germinating in their perpetual mission to colonize every bit of bare earth. Tarp after tarp of garden refuse has been hauled to the compost heap as atrophied muscles ache from an inactive winter spent indoors.

Weary from hours of clipping and raking, I wandered through the yard with my notebook, recording observations and listing projects to be tackled in the weeks to come. Small branches and twigs litter the lawn and several partially broken tree limbs could be seen suspended overhead as a result of our recent windy conditions. Pruning these damaged branches and thinning out overgrown trees and shrubs will be a top priority once the spring bulbs have been relieved of their soggy covering.

Mid-February to mid-April is a preferred time of year to prune dormant plants since it is considerably easier to view their architecture and observe damaged, diseased, or crossed branches. Winter storms often cause injury to woody plants leaving jagged cuts that may collect water can potentially lead to disease. Partially broken limbs may eventually lead to the bark being stripped beneath the tear. Damaged or diseased stems and limbs should be pruned as soon as they are noticed to prevent the spread of infections. Dead limbs can be removed at any time throughout the year. Should you observe crossed branches, lop off at least one of the branches, as the constant rubbing of one branch against another is an open invitation for disease to penetrate damaged bark.

Plants produce food reserves at season's end to help them survive the winter months and to initiate growth in spring. Reducing the number of branches and buds in late winter leaves more energy for the remaining shoots and promotes especially vigorous growth in spring.

Once the trimming of damaged and diseased branches has been completed, routine pruning of nearly all established trees and shrubs should be undertaken to train and revitalize or retrain overgrown plants to keep them in scale with their surroundings. Regular pruning improves the health of most plants by promoting air circulation and allowing light to reach the interior of an otherwise densely branched tree or shrub.

The timing of pruning will determine a plant's response to the process. Plants produce food reserves at season's end to help them survive the winter months and to initiate growth in spring. Reducing the number of branches and buds in late winter leaves more energy for the remaining shoots and promotes especially vigorous growth in spring. One drawback to pruning early bloomers at this time of year, is the removal of some of this season's flowers but the ultimate rewards are worth a few less blossoms. Bring the pruned branches of forsythia, crabapples, dogwoods and other early-flowering shrubs indoors to force into early bloom or, if you do not wish to sacrifice those lovely blossoms, prune spring bloomers after they finish flowering.

The two basic approaches to pruning are heading back and thinning out. Heading back is the technique used when trimming a hedge where the entire shape is clipped, producing a more formal appearance with denser, sturdier growth. The thinning out of a tree or shrub produces a more open plant with a more natural, graceful appearance.

Thinning out tends to be the preferred technique for pruning ornamental trees and shrubs. The heading back of rhododendrons, azaleas, or other foundation plantings into little round forms often spoils the individual beauty and character which distinguishes each unique species, although this approach is often prompted by overgrown shrubs or space limitations. When thinning out a tree or shrub, be sure to step back and observe the shape and structure of the plant before you begin the pruning process, making a mental image of the plant's form. Remove only those branches that are crossed, distorted or crowded without changing the basic form of the plant unless you wish to modify its overall shape. To shorten a woody stem, always cut back to a bud. On branches where the buds alternate, cut the stem at an angle and cut away from an outward facing bud to encourage growth away from the interior spaces of your shrub or tree unless you are striving to fill a gap which may have been produced by storm damage. If the plant has opposite buds, cut immediately above a strong pair. Do not leave stubs that may develop disease but be careful not to prune too closely to a bud, which may cause the bud to dry out.

When pruning entire branches from the trunk of a tree, cuts should be made just beyond the ridge (above the branch) and the collar (a swollen area below the point of the branch's attachment to the trunk). Sawing a branch too closely to the trunk may disrupt the healing process or may stimulate growth around the site of the wound producing new, unwanted sprouts. It is not necessary to apply paint to the wound as this application may actually interfere with the plant's natural healing ability. Up to one-third of a plant can be safely pruned away.

Drawing inspiration from the North River

Haywood-Sullivan will be donating one of her paintings to the North and South River Watershed Association (NSRWA), to help raise money and awareness for the local organization dedicated to preserving and celebrating the rivers.

"This is a beautiful show," said Paula Boyce, assistant director for the NSRWA. "We're really excited about it… raising public awareness for the rivers."

Boyce said people will be familiar with many of the areas captured in Haywood-Sullivan's paintings, but they might be taken by the artist's perspective.

"They're breathtaking," Boyce said of the paintings. "She's done such a beautiful job capturing the essence of the river."

The piece being raffled off to benefit the NSRWA, valued at $1,000, is from the Driftway area in Scituate at the Herring River, one of the tributaries of the North River.

"I'm clueless when I sit down to paint… I don't have a lot of control over what happens. It's a very intuitive process for me,I just paint it and put it out there."

Liz Haywood-Sullivan

Haywood-Sullivan is also enjoying national acclaim as an artist. Her painting, "Sweeney's Field" received the second highest prize in the latest annual competition sponsored by "The Pastel Journal," the leading trade magazine in the field. Along with the prize money and the Dianne B. Bernhard Gold Medal for Excellence, Haywood-Sullivan's work , including pictures on nine paintings, is featured in a five-page article in its March/April issue.

But for now, Haywood-Sullivan will sit back and enjoy the success of her latest work, which will be on display downstairs at The James Library through April 4.

"I'm very pleased," Haywood-Sullivan said as she made final preparations for Friday's opening at The James last week. "This is by far my best show to date."

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 6

Take advantage of favorable planetary influences this morning and get an early start. Plan to sign contracts, promote your ideas or start important ventures before 9:00 a.m., when the Sagittarius moon forms a harmonious contact to Mercury. The remainder of the day continues to rate high for new beginnings. This is also a wonderful day for socializing, enjoying favorite sports or leisure activities. The Sagittarius moon becomes inactive at 9:31 p.m. until 11:48 p.m., when it enters Capricorn.

THURSDAY, MARCH 7

Roll up your sleeves and take on a full work agenda. This is a day to get things done. The moon travels in ambitious Capricorn today and tomorrow. An applying alignment of the sun and Pluto, however, prompts you to finish old business rather than starting new projects. Get your ducks in line today; prepare for new starts tomorrow morning. Venus enters Aries at 8:42 p.m., remaining there until April 1.

FRIDAY, MARCH 8

Plan to get important projects off the ground before 10:06 a.m., when the Capricorn moon aligns with the sun and becomes inactive. The remainder of the day continues to rate high for productivity. An applying alignment of Mercury/Uranus prompts you to follow your first impression. Your instincts are on target. Tackle jobs that need troubleshooting, problem-solving. You can cut through obstacles and get to the heart of a matter. Open your mind to new possibilities.

SATURDAY, MARCH 9

The moon enters free-spirited Aquarius at 9:56 a.m., remaining there throughout the weekend. In addition, a harmonious alignment of Mars and Jupiter generates energy, enthusiasm. This is a wonderful weekend for a new adventure, travel, visiting or entertaining friends. Change your routine and do something different. There is one rough spot this evening, when the moon forms a challenging 90-degree alignment to Mars. Drive with care.

SUNDAY, MARCH 10

An Aquarius moon may lead you in new directions. Keep an open mind. Be willing to experiment with new ideas and be open to new experiences. Put career or domestic worries on the back burner. Kick back, relax, follow your bliss.

MONDAY, MARCH 11

The temptation is great to 'play hooky' today. The moon continues its travel in freedom-loving Aquarius. In addition, this moon aligns with its ruler, Uranus, at 2:28 p.m., when it becomes inactive. If you are working, focus on projects that require support or input from others. Group efforts, charitable campaigns get the green light. Mercury moves into Pisces at 6:34 p.m., remaining there until March 29. The moon enters Pisces at 9:56 p.m., and aligns with Mercury at 10:26 p.m. Follow your intuition; pay attention to your dreams.

TUESDAY, MARCH 12

The dark side of a new moon generally brings a difficult, potentially depressing period. However, a 90-degree alignment of Venus and Jupiter saves the day. Treat yourself to a vacation day or a lunch date with friends or a shopping spree. Keep it light, however. Don't sign contracts or make long-term commitments. A lunar alignment to Saturn in effect between 2:09-5:09 p.m., may bring a lull period, when energy is deflated. Take time out for yourself. Reflect on and learn from past experiences. Meditate for peace of mind.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 13

This day has its challenges. The dark side of the new moon is in force and effect until 9:02 p.m. In addition, a lunar alignment to Pluto affects the morning. Its influence may spark emotional thunderstorms and bring up old wounds, resentments. Be more sensitive, nurturing toward others. Make up a list of things to do and stay busy. Follow through on projects that need a finishing touch; handle routine errands and chores. The new moon culminates at 23-degrees of Pisces, and the moon becomes inactive at 9:02 p.m. Get extra rest tonight.

Plaza plan has an uphill battle

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Planning Board voted last week not to support a bylaw change that would allow expansion plans at Cohasset Plaza to go forward with a special permit from the Zoning Board of Appeals.

It's the third time in four years that plaza owner, Donald Staszko, has tried to set the stage to expand the Route 3A shopping center through a Town Meeting article and failed to win Planning Board support.

Board members said it was nothing personal. They praised how Staszko maintains the plaza that is anchored by Super Stop & Shop.

This year's article asks for a different bylaw amendment, although the end result would be the same – the potential addition of a large dry-goods retail store at the back of the plaza coupled with the expansion of Stop & Shop.

Shaw's Plaza, which lies outside the watershed protection district, was expanded into a residential zone by special permit.

Although the additional commercial business would contribute an estimated $100,000 in annual tax revenue to Cohasset, the Planning Board wasn't buying and said it would not support the article at the March 30 Town Meeting.

What Staszko is asking for is the

Tax hike sought for sewer study

Debt exclusion vote is slated is the town ready to set the stage for a third major sewer project?

Voters at the annual Town Meeting and April 6 election will have the final say.

What's on the docket is a debt exclusion of some $750,000 to pay for the design and engineering costs to install sewers for the Little Harbor and Atlantic Avenue areas, about 450 homes.

If approved, this would be the third sewer project in recent years, following on the heels of the Central Cohasset sewer expansion and plant upgrade and the North Cohasset project that was part of an inter-municipal agreement with Hull.

The debt exclusion needs a two-thirds majority vote at Town Meeting because it involves borrowing, and then a majority vote on the ballot April 6.

"We need a debt exclusion if we are going to do this project," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "We simply don't have enough money to do this without one."

Under Prop. 2-1/2 — the state law capping the amount a municipality can raise its tax levy over the prior year — debt exclusion overrides represent a temporary tax increase that goes away once the debt is paid off.

Selectmen held an emergency meeting last Friday to put the

Getting schools excited about recycling

$50 savings bond for best new idea

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The waste of recyclable materials in Cohasset schools has captured the attention of the recycling committee.

The committee has been trying for several years to get the school department more involved in its efforts but feels it has yet to make an impact, says Allan MacDonald, committee member.

The committee's latest efforts include offering a $50 saving bond to the student who can come up with a project which best exemplifies the needs for recycling.

"We feel recycling and other forms of energy conservation should be an integral component of the school's agenda."
— Allan MacDonald, Recycling Committee

"It's important to get the kids involved in these issues," MacDonald said. "The only way to get the schools committed to this is by having a nucleus students kids who are motivated."

Jack DeLorenzo, assistant principal at the high school, said the schools have been paying attention to recycling.

"We've been recycling for a number of years," he said. "It's something we try to emphasize."

MacDonald said the high school is the town's biggest waster of paper and should

Racing for a cancer cure

Cohasset man to run for charity

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Some people will run for glory or self gratification but others will run for a cure.

On April 15, Christopher Valentine, 5 Diab Lane, will run the Boston Marathon for the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute.

Along with other DFCI representatives from 20 states, Valentine will run the 26.2 mile route from Hopkinton to Boston in an effort to raise more than $3 million for cancer research. This is Valentine's third marathon and second running for the DFCI.

"It's really inspirational to run for Dana-Farber," Valentine said. "Once you get involved you realize that everyone is affected by this terrible disease."

Valentine, CFO of Champion Exposition, hopes to raise nearly $10,000 for the race. He said his co-workers have been very generous.

"I think everyone realizes how important this cause is," he said.

Janet Haley Dubow, who works with in the media relations department at Dana-Farber, said to have more than 300 runners is a very exciting. The DFCI runners are from all walks of life, she said.

"Some are bar owners, some CEOs and some are survivors," she said. "Everyone is running to eradicate this disease."

The money raised by the runners will fund the Claudia Adams Barr Program in Innovative Basic Cancer Research ad the DFCI in Boston. Valentine describes it as a progressive demonstrate more responsibility to the students it is trying to teach.

"Cutting down on waste is a values issue, a matter of ethics and morality," he said. "We feel recycling and other forms of energy conservation should be an integral component of the school's agenda."

But some students are championing the cause.

As part of their community service class, Evan Pestone, Nick Spirito and Kirk Kahn are leading an effort to make people more aware about the benefits of recycling. The trio has put recycling bins in every classroom and are assisting the janitorial staff in taking the bins to the dump.

"There was no system set up for recycling in the high school," Kahn said. "We felt like the school needed to stop wasting so much paper."

He added that the teachers are starting to respond and the program is catching on.

Arthur Lehr, chairman of the recycling committee, said it's very positive to see students taking the initiative.

"Eventually, we're going to be in a whole lot of trouble if no one does anything," he said. "If we can get the kids in a habit of recycling now, it'll continue in the future."

MacDonald feels that the community service class, taught by Jack Buckley, is a step in the right direction.

"The class is very important and very realistic," MacDonald said. "The key is we need one inspired individual to get the ball rolling."

MacDonald, a self-described environmentalist and ecologist, taught at the high school for more than 25 years. He said recycling was an issue was he was just beginning his career.

"Cohasset students are always going to do well in school, they're very bright," he said. "However, the school department needs to teach more than just academics, it needs to teach values and conservation is one of them."

MacDonald added that if a teacher is talking about conservation and recycling, yet handing out information sheets on one-sided pieces of paper, they're being hypocrites.

"If the kids see teachers throwing away paper or tests they're likely to follow suit," he said.

Cohasset residents may obtain permits on a daily basis through May 1 for open burning. Permits may be obtained by calling the Fire Department Dispatch Center at 781-383-0260 from 9 am.-2 p.m. Permits are valid for one day only.

Burning may be conducted during periods of good atmospheric ventilation and must not cause a nuisance, the fire department says. Adverse weather conditions (wind and drought) will impact the issuing of permits. Burning hours are 10 a.m.-4 p.m. on days permits are issued. Decisions to issue permits are made daily at 9 a.m. Persons calling for permits before that hour will be advised to call back.

Open burning permits are issued for the disposal of brush, cane, driftwood and forest debris. Burning shall be conducted on land nearest to the place were the debris came from. Burning must be conducted at least 75 feet away from any dwelling. Select a safe area with no ground cover.

While burning, the fire must be attended at all times until completely extinguished. Have a water hose, rake and shovel nearby for fire control.

'Where will I live?'

Senior housing forum is slated

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

An elderly couple living in a $560,000 home — the average value of a home in Cohasset — is not on easy street.

In fact, they may have paid $30,000 for the house some 30 years ago and now may be faced with a tax bill of nearly $6,500 without the cash to cover it between their Social Security and pension payments.

Joseph Nedrow of the Cohasset Senior Housing Committee hears the same story over and over again: local seniors are being priced out of a town they love.

"So many people in this town have made great contributions over the years and are recent widows or widowers, who can no longer afford to take care of their homes and have no place to go," he said. Nedrow said he hasn't found anyone who isn't supportive of more options for senior housing.

But in the future, if plans for a senior housing complex fall into place, older folk could have options in town.

If the proposed Accessory Dwelling Bylaw passes muster with voters at the March 30 Town Meeting, the potential to create "in-law" apartments within existing homes might also help fill the need, albeit on a smaller basis.

Nedrow and Town Planner Liz Harrington will discuss the issues of senior housing and accessory dwellings at a special forum "Where Will I be Living in the Future?" at 12:30 p.m., Thursday, March 21, at the South Shore Community Center. The talk is open to the public.

The housing committee is eyeing a 10-acre parcel of town-owned land near Stop & Shop as a potential development for 50 units of housing for seniors.

A special forum "Where Will I be Living in the Future?" is at 12:30 p.m., Thursday, March 21 at the South Shore Community Center. The talk is open to the public.

Access to the site could be through Cohasset Plaza rather than Red Fox Lane, which has no traffic light on 3A.

Nedrow said plaza owner Donald Staszko was open to the proposal of an access through the shopping center that would provide seniors the benefit of the traffic light to make left turns onto the busy state highway,

"It's a beautiful site, better than the village," Nedrow said. "Seniors could walk to the store, rent a movie or buy a cup of coffee." The site is also close to the new Osgood School that might provide volunteer opportunities for the seniors.

The committee, which is exploring creative ways to finance the project, is awaiting results of an engineering study to see how many units might be feasible at the site and has looked at other projects in places like Duxbury and Milton as potential models.

The March 30 Town Meeting will decide whether to adopt an accessory dwelling bylaw that would allow 10 home conversions a year by special permit from the Zoning Board. The bylaw, although not restricted to seniors, is seen as a potential benefit for elderly citizens who want to stay in their homes. They could rent out the apartment that is created in their home or live in it themselves. In addition to a number of conditions, the principal or accessory dwelling must be owner-occupied, have enough off-street parking and the principal dwelling must be at least 1,200 square feet.

Both Selectmen and the Planning Board support the accessory dwelling article, although Planning Board member Robert Sturdy has his doubts about whether it will be used by many.

He said the accessory dwelling would add more assessed value to a property — driving the tax bills up even higher.

But Housing Committee member Margy Charles said the bylaw was a step forward for senior housing.

"It's a start and may provide some dwelling options for those that want to stay in town," she said.

Runway group makes appeal

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

A group of concerned citizens is still fighting to have a proposed runway at Logan airport grounded.

Members for the South Shore Jet Pollution Coalition presented their case to the Advisory Board Tuesday. Although problems with the projector prevented a multi-media presentation, members of the Advisory Board were still given an in-depth explanation of the problems with the runway.

The group is looking for the Advisory Board's blessing at Town Meeting for a $30,000 request to support a lawsuit headed up by Hull. The lawsuit, supported by Hingham and Revere as well, states the Environmental Impact Report that Massport and the FAA released has false and misleading statements and should be thrown out.

The group feels if it can prove the report was intentionally misleading it will have a sufficient chance to stop the runway altogether.

Ralph Dormitzer, member of the coalition, outlined some of the concerns the group has with proposed runway 14/32. He asserted that if the runway is realized, Cohasset will experience 280 more flights a day. Not only will that add to added noise level over town but will have an adverse effect on air quality.

"They (Massport) want total freedom to run as many flights as possible," Dormitzer said. "They figure they'll annoy the fewest amount of people if they run them over Cohasset."

"They figure they'll annoy the fewest amount of people if they run them over Cohasset."
— Ralph Dormitzer, runway opponent

Linda Wakeman, another member of the coalition, said the group is trying to have the FAA and Massport realize an alternative that would re-route the flights over the ocean rather than over Cohasset.

"It would just make more sense if they did it that way," she said. "Unfortunately, they're not listening to us."

Dick Avery, a member of the Advisory Board, asked the group if $30,000 was the limit, or whether Cohasset could end up spending more. He added one of the concerns he's heard is that by entering this lawsuit there is the possibility of opening up the floodgates.

Dormitzer said that could happen.

"It is definitely possible that we could spend more money," he said. "However, we are not the plaintiffs and could get out any time."

The town has already spent the $30,000 that was appropriated at last year's annual Town Meeting, for a review of the environmental impact report on the proposed runway which has become the basis for the lawsuit. At special Town Meeting in November residents voted down a similar proposal for $30,000 to fight the runway. Selectmen voted to not support this year's article.

Residents will have an opportunity to vote on the issue at Town Meeting on March 30.

State antes up for roads and bridges

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund announced the Swift Administration is planning an early release of $53,393.76 in local aid for Cohasset to fund transportation projects in the town, part of a total $50 million release of additional Chapter 90 funds for FY02. The early release of the funding will allow communities wide latitude in planning upcoming road and bridge construction.

This allotment is in addition to the $52,763 from the FY02 budget, for a total of $106,156.76 for this fiscal year.

With the early release of additional monies, cities and towns will be allowed more time to budget local aid into their road and bridge spending plans and permit them more latitude to prioritize projects. The state typically releases local aid – or Chapter 90 funding – in the late spring, the time when communities are gearing up for the road and bridge construction season.

Chapter 90 funding is allocated to cities and towns based on a formula which factors in the number of miles of local roadway, population, and the employment rate in a given community. The funding is reimbursed to cities and towns on pre-approved transportation projects as construction unfolds.

Hagerty house is topic Tuesday

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The Hagerty house is going to take center stage at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting at Town Hall.

The house has been in the center of debate for some time, which intensified when selectmen terminated the Cohasset Lobster Lab's lease of the building last year. It's anticipated that Jack Buckley, a teacher at Cohasset Middle High-School, will outline the Coastal Maritime Institute's interest in the building at Tuesday's meeting. Buckley did not return phone calls or email messages by press time.

CMI is an organization that provides summer classes to students curious about marine life. The organization also offers a rowing program to students at the high school. Last November, Buckley said CMI envisioned making the Hagerty House into a coastal research center, creating a public research center, and having a water monitoring program for kids.

The house has been in the center of debate for some time.

The Hagerty House sits on 2.1 acres of land is assessed at more than $270,000 and what's on the land (including the Hagerty House and boathouse) is assessed at more than $365,000 bringing the total assessed value of the property to approximately $635,000. While the property does have value, so far no one has been able to realize the potential of the Victorian house, which once served as the offices and showroom for Cohasset Colonial that manufactured furniture kits.

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

STILL NO SNOW

Hello Cohasset. Well, another week has passed and still no snow. I guess I should finally accept that it is not going to happen. No blizzard, no medium storm and not even enough to have one, itty, bitty snow day!(I am sorry, I do love them!)

SURVIVOR

Have any of you been watching Survivor at all? Seeing them on that show does make me wish it was already summer although I certainly don't envy the living conditions they had. Kathy (CHS 1972) is definitely making a statement for herself and it will remain to be seen how she does in upcoming shows.

RIGHT PRIORITIES

I wanted to take a little time to reflect back on our last six months and remember all of the people who were affected by September 11, 2001. I know that everyone was touched in some way by the events that took place. I also know that this week has been such a strong reminder for us all of what happened and that we still need to focus on healing and moving forward on all angles. It sometimes seems so easy to fall back into old patterns and habits and making such a big deal about small issues and problems. Make sure to take the time in your daily lives to stop and remember what is truly important in our lives and let the people you care about the most know how much they mean. Life can change in an instant!

BEST WISHES

Happy Birthday to you, Happy Birthday to you.... A very special Happy Birthday wish is going out to Barbara L. Conte who is celebrating her 70th birthday on March 15. This wonderful and heartfelt wish is being sent to Barbara from her family who all wanted to say, "Happy Birthday Mom and Grandma! We love you a great, big bunch!" Love, Carmello, Linda, Al, Jack, Joni, Jenna and Jack II! Barbara, I know so many of us in town all send you the best of birthday wishes to a very special person.

SPECIAL DAY

Also celebrating a special birthday is Linda Menard from Scituate who is celebrating the big 40! Linda, I know that your wonderful family let you know how special you are in every way. Happy Birthday from all of your friends here in Cohasset.

MARATHON RUNNERS

Look out Heartbreak Hill, here comes the dynamic trio from the Deer Hill School. Please let us know in the next few weeks of more Cohasset residents and friends who may be running in the race. To all of you who train so hard for this accomplishment, we all wish you the best of luck and will be cheering you on each step of the way.

HISTORICAL SOCIETY TALK

A lecture will be held on Thursday, March 14 at 7:30 p.m. in the Lightkeeper's House. Plaza plan has an uphill battle right to go before the Zoning Board of Appeals to extend the highway business use by some 200 feet into the abutting residentially zoned area, which he also owns. Under the existing bylaw, a use permitted on one portion may be extended by up to 200 feet into the other portion by special permit if both portions of the property were under common ownership before zoning district lines were adopted. The property must also have frontage on a street in the "less restrictive" district.

Under the existing by-law, Shaw's Plaza, which lies outside the watershed protection district, expanded the highway business use into a residential district by special permit when it was constructed.

Staszko would like the same rights that Shaw's had.

But here's the hitch: Unlike Shaw's, Cohasset Plaza lies in the watershed protection district – an exemption to the current bylaw. Staszko's article, which is a Citizens Petition submitted with the signatures of 10 registered voters, would strike that exception and allow him to apply for a special permit to extend the highway business use back 200 feet.

Staszko told the Planning Board the amendment didn't lift all checks and balances.

"If I got a special permit, then the Planning Board would have site plan approval," he said.

But the Planning Board said it was worried about precedent and was bolstered in its view by the Water Commission that said some 16 parcels in the watershed protection district could be affected by the by-law change.

Staszko disputed the impact of the zoning amendment because it would "not make economic sense" for most properties highlighted by the Water Commission. He also stressed the town still gets two looks at a project: through the ZBA and Planning Board.

"Where this is different than last year, is last year there would be no ZBA – we'd go right to the Planning Board for site plan approval," he said. Last year's article and the initial one, four years ago asked the land that abuts the plaza be rezoned to highway business.

Stephen J. Kuzma, 31 Red Fox Lane, which abuts the plaza said the proposal "amounts to spot zoning in favor of Mr. Staszko and at the expense of the town."

But Town Planner Liz Harrington explained the amendment would allow an option now open to landowners outside the watershed protection district be available "across the board."

Planning Board member Bob Sturdy said the board has always been "steadfast" in its position not to support zoning amendments aimed at specific purpose.

"We've always been opposed to articles narrowly targeted at some property owner positively or negatively," said Sturdy. He added the Planning Board would not have authority to stop the project if the amendment passed and the ZBA granted a special permit for the plaza.

"The Planning Board would have no basis for denying a site plan properly put together," he said.

Last year, the plaza article failed to win the necessary two-thirds majority by only four votes at Town Meeting.

Margy Charles, 85 Linden Drive, who attended the Planning Board meeting last week to lobby for a different Town Meeting article, expressed some frustration over the plaza issue.

"It seems to me you're all saying Don has done the best job with his commercial property on 3A – he's looking for what Shaw's could do.

"Why not let him go before the ZBA?" she asked.

Tax hike sought for sewer study

question on the ballot. The debt exclusion would add about 11 cents to the tax rate, amounting to about $62 a year on the average real estate bill for five years.

It could be possible to roll the cost of engineering into the estimated $10 million Little Harbor - Atlantic Avenue sewer project if construction was to begin within two years, Haddad said. Incorporating the engineering costs into the entire project would lessen the tax impact because the town would have longer to pay off the debt service, he said.

Cohasset is currently under a state court order to solve its wastewater woes or face hefty fines. But while some feel the so-called "Second Amended Agreement for Judgment," means the town should take action immediately; others say there's no rush.

Haddad talked with state officials and feels the town is on the right path.

"Are they breathing down our backs? No," Haddad said. "Do we need to get something done? Yes."

Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed said the state understands the tight fiscal times that all towns are facing. He said it's unreasonable for the state to expect the town to appropriate large sums of money for a sewer project when it's delaying reimbursement of school building projects.

"We don't want to get in a position in which the state feels we're acting in bad faith," Koed said. "But we feel there is some leeway on the timetable."

Even Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions, the grass-roots group that has fought for installation of sewers in their neighborhood, has not decided if the timing of the debt exclusion is practical. Stacey Weaver, a member on the CEES board, said CEES board members are being polled about the situation.

"We realize the town is between a rock and a hard place," Weaver said. "But I personally feel that the longer the town waits, the more it's going to cost."

CEES, which had not anticipated a debt exclusion would be required for the design-engineering phase of the proposed project, intends to send an update on its position to all residents, who stand to be affected by the sewer project by the end of the week.

Selectman Tom Callahan says the town work on a wastewater solution for the entire town.

"I don't see this as something that is in dire need of attention," Callahan said. "This has to be thought out and planned for the next 10 to 15 years depending on when we get our funding for the school building projects."

An alternative to installing sewers around Little Harbor would be to have the area homeowners upgrade their on-site septic systems. Sewer Commissioner Sean Cunning said this could be an expensive proposition possibly costing upwards of $60,000 apiece.

"For everyone to have an (upgraded) on-site septic system in would require the Board of Health to inspect everyone's house to make sure it met Title 5 requirements which are can be difficult to achieve," he said. Title 5 is the state's environmental code governing septic systems.

Cunning added that installing sewers would be less expensive for affected residents. Sewers are estimated to each homeowner an estimated $35,000, if the project is completely paid by users.

Last year, voters approved a study to see if the Central Cohasset wastewater treatment plant could expand. The Sewer Commission also completed a study to see if it was feasible to sewer the Little Harbor area.

According the a CEES information sheet, 40 percent of the systems in the area are marginal or have failed, and another 40 percent, if upgraded or expanded, would not comply with the Board of Health's nitrogen removal criteria.

CEES said it has worked with town officials over the past three years to find a permanent, more cost-effective way to protect the environment than on-site systems. Residents of Atlantic Avenue have experienced similar septic system problems and expressed an interest in joining CEES.

Local jewelry maker is a real gem

Donates pieces to charity

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

You may start seeing her designs more and more around town. Some may appear on people's wrists, necks and ears.

Elizabeth Kissick, 170 N. Main St., moved from Kansas City to Cohasset in September and has continued her jewelry business, EK Designs.

Kissick is working extensively with the Cohasset community on numerous charity events. Currently she is donating 25 pieces to the Avon Breast Cancer Walk, and will be contributing 10 percent of sales from a jewelry party in April to the South Shore Community Center Playground Fund.

"It's very important for me to give back to the community," Kissick said. "I've been blessed with so much that I feel the need to help others."

Kissick's grandmother died of cancer and has an aunt who is currently being treated for the disease.

"It means so much to me to try and help find a cure," she said.

When she's not making jewelry Kissick has had a chance to embrace Cohasset and describes it as "being in heaven without having to die." Some of Kissick's work will appear in the Festival on the Common in June and will be displayed in some of the homes of families in the upcoming Community Center Kitchen Tour.

Kissick is married and has three children in the Cohasset school system and is highly dedicated to her family.

"As soon as they get off the bus, my work stops and my enjoyment begins," she said.

Kissick has a studio set up in her house on N. Main Street and does hundreds of pieces a year. Her jewelry is currently available in approximately 60 stores nationwide.

Kissick has worked with her partner April Gottschalk since 1998 and has been making jewelry for eight years. At first, Gottschalk just helped design the jewelry but after attending a class in glass blowing, started to create the beads that Kissick uses in many of her pieces.

"I don't know what I'd do without her," Kissick said. "She has a great eye for color and for glass blowing."

Kissick said when she began she made name bracelets but quickly noticed that many were copying her trend so she switched to hand-blown glass accessories.

Angela Brown, a sales manager for EK Designs and resident of Cohasset, thinks the Kissick has a lot to offer the town.

Elizabeth Kissick works with her jewelry, as April Gottschalk looks on. Gottschalk blows the glass that creates the beads.

"Elizabeth (Kissick) is a remarkable woman who oozes with talent and energy," she said. "Her jewelry is so unique."

Kissick said the pleasure she derives from the business is seeing the smiles on her customers' faces when they wear her pieces. She added that the jewelry she designs is best described as "happy and colorful."

"Everyday I try to do something different," she said. "I strive for my pieces to be unique."

Kissick, who has also penned two children's books, got her start as an art teacher in Maine. After moving back to Kansas City and having her second child, Kissick felt like she needed to do something with her spare time.

"It was a really snowy winter and I was home quite a bit," she said. "I started doing arts projects and went to a bead store and never left."

Along with bracelets, chokers and earrings, Kissick makes communion, rosary and baptism pieces. She also welcome custom orders.

"One of my goal is to make pieces that someone can wear and have people come up to them asking where they bought it," she said.

Racing for cancer cure research center which greatly benefits from the money.

"I talked with one of the scientists there and he said he spends 50 percent of his time filling out funding applications," Valentine said. "Hopefully with this money they'll be able to spend more time finding a cure."

Valentine ran his first marathon at the age of 34, the same age his father was when he died of cancer.

"Hopefully, in 15 years nobody will have to run for the DFCI because there won't be a need for it," he said.

"Once you get involved you realize that everyone is affected by this terrible disease."

— Christopher Valentine, 5 Diab Lane

Valentine has been training for months and runs approximately 30 to 40 miles a week. He said the hardest part of the race is can be the mental aspects, not the physical ones.

"The fact that you're doing something with not a lot of distraction for four hours is a big hurdle," he said. "I just try and relax and break the race up into pieces."

Valentine said the best part of the race is the last mile coming into Kenmore Square when the Dana-Farber runners are greeted by more than 20 children who are all patients in its pediatric ward.

"It gives you an extra boost," he said. "It reminds you why you are running."

Since the DFCI instituted its Marathon Challenge in 1989, runners have raised more than $13 million for the Barr Program. In 1990, Dana-Farber was among the first charity organization to be given official marathon numbers by the Boston Athletic Association. The DFCI features training guidance from Jack Fultz, the 1976 Boston Marathon men's champion, plus team training runs, extensive fundraising support, and volunteer opportunities for non-runners.

"You really feel like you're part of a family when you run with DFCI," Valentine said. "It's exceptional how many people are involved with this organization."

To contribute to Valentine's marathon run, send a check payable to "Dana-Farber Marathon Challenge" to its offices at 152A Trapelo Road, Lincoln, MA 01773. Donors should indicate that the contribution is for Valentine. For more information, call 781-259-8881.

OPINION

Thanks, Brian

There aren't too many places where police chiefs are better known by their first names. But then, there aren't too many small towns like Cohasset — where most people are on a first-name basis and even selectmen prefer using nicknames, such as Ronnie, Fred, Tom and Mike. (Merle doesn't have the option).

Many called Chief Brian Noonan, "Brian," not out of a lack of respect but with a sense of affection.

We always found Brian to be the consummate professional — one who modernized the department and often had to deal with a public that didn't want to accept that real crime does occur even in this beautiful, tucked-away seaside community.

But after 28 years, nine as chief, we can't blame Brian for wanting to call it a day.

"I loved the job," he said Friday. "You don't leave after doing something half your life and being on alert 24 hours a day, seven days a week without mixed emotions."

Nevertheless, Brian was happy to pass the mantle of leadership to Robert Jackson, whose family packed the selectmen's office for the swearing-in ceremony.

As expected, the transition from one local chief to another went smoothly.

Now as the town embarks on the Jackson era, it should give Cohasset residents great comfort to know that the extended police chief search, which attracted some 54 applicants, determined the finest candidate was right here at home.

Like Brian, Bob grew up here in town and raised his children here. He understands the community and is looking forward to the challenge of leading the police department into the 21st century.

We wish both men well as they open new chapters in their lives.

Senior housing

Seniors and other interested citizens won't want to miss the forum "Where Will I be Living in the Future?" at 12:30 p.m. next Thursday at the South Shore Community Center. With sky-high assessments and soaring property tax bills, affordable housing opportunities for our senior population are more critical than ever.

Older people, who have spent their lives here and raised their children here, want to remain in town if at all possible. We should all work hard to see that they can.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Contradiction in your editorial

TO THE EDITOR:

In your editorial 'Bubba' fever, I read what appeared to be a contradiction.

If Andrew and Claudia Quigley had not overreacted and sent a copy of their letter to the Cohasset Mariner, none of the written dialogue or phone calls would have taken place. You stated that the letter was "newsworthy;" therefore, we should thank the Quigleys for their courage to make this story a news item. What would have been yielded from your suggestion of talking privately to school officials?

The final point involves a quote from your editorial: "Although Cohasset is not diverse, we have understood the community to be a tolerant place that includes one of the oldest METCO programs in the state, a Diversity Committee, the Appalachia Service Project, and the 'No Place for Hate' pledge that incorporates educational programs."

With all this said, let's pretend "Bubba" Smith lives in Cohasset and is your neighbor. Would you or someone still imitate him over a school loudspeaker with the thought, he is from the South and that is the way he talks. (The inside joke would be that if you knew him you would understand. How do the students figure it out?) We forget that Antoine Smith, not "Bubba," is the public figure.

Cohasset knows how to reach out to others but it also can be arrogant in its sensitivity.

Diversity committee offers its assistance

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Diversity Committee wants to respond to the "fictional portrayal" incident, which occurred at the Joseph Osgood School on Feb. 1, 2002. More importantly, we are troubled by the reaction and the aftermath to the incident.

We can only hope to learn from the aforementioned incident and to grow as individuals, educators, administrators, and as a community. Towards this end the Diversity Committee has offered its assistance to help the School Committee organize a session with school officials aimed at developing a thoughtful and effective way to respond to future similar situations.

Nothing historic in metal fences

TO THE EDITOR:

R. Murray Campbell is mistaken when he says in a letter in last week's Cohasset Mariner that the barred black metal fence proposed by the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation to separate Border Street pedestrians from the harbor in our colonial village is "historically apt". During a recent two-hour drive around Cohasset I was not able to find any colonial home with a fence of that style. (I traveled most but not all of the streets in town.) The only prominent barred black metal fence I found anywhere in town adorns one very substantial non-colonial mansion. Not only is black metal fencing the antithesis of colonial design, it is, in Cohasset, next to nonexistent. How can it be "historically apt"?

Incidentally, I could not find anywhere in town an example of the droopy sunflower style black metal lampposts that are also proposed for Border Street.

I will not respond to the rest of Mr. Campbell's letter or his personal attack, but commend for his consideration Peter Wood's thoughtful letter in last week's Cohasset Mariner under the heading, "No More Insults".

Why ball fields are a good thing

ISABEL BLACKBURN
88 ELM STREET
DEAR ISABEL:

I am writing in response to your letter which was published in last week's Cohasset Mariner concerning the two new ball fields which are proposed to be built at the Gravel Pit on North Main Street.

While I agree that given these uncertain financial times we all need to consider any new projects very carefully, I think that once you look at all of the facts surrounding this proposal, you will agree that the Town's limited participation in the funding of this project should be supported.

Almost two years ago the Selectmen decided that it was time to do something about the Gravel Pit which I think everyone will agree is one of the uglier and more dangerous spots in Cohasset. Toward that end, the Selectmen created the Gravel Yard Re-Use Committee whose members included several North Main Street neighbors (the "Committee"). The Committee considered several proposals for the use of the Gravel Pit including a waste water treatment plant, a new fire station, a skateboard park, housing for seniors and soccer fields. After considering all proposals, the Committee unanimously supported the building of additional ball fields. The Committee, especially the neighbors, felt that the building of two ball fields would be the least disruptive alternative for this residential neighborhood and a logical choice given the proximity of Barnes Field and the Swim Center.

Funding for the project is proposed to be done as part of a partnership among the Town, the Community Preservation Committee ("CPC") and the Little League. At this point, Town Meeting has appropriated and the Town Manager has spent $42,000 toward this project. The Little League has spent, or committed to spend before the end of the month, an additional $40,000. The engineer hired by the Town estimates that the total cost of the project will be an additional $450,000. The Little League has committed to contribute $150,000 of this estimated cost over and above the $40,000 already spent. In addition to contributing a substantial portion of the project costs, the Little League will maintain these fields with the exception of grass cutting which will be done by the Department of Public Works. In fact, our fund raising efforts are in full swing, including a golf tournament and dinner on May 24..

The first Article to be considered by Town Meeting concerning this project will be Article 4 which will request Town Meeting's approval of the CPC's unanimous recommendation that it contribute $100,000 toward this project. This amount would be paid from funds held by the CPC which are made up of money already collected from the 1.5 percent surcharge on real estate taxes plus matching funds obtained from the state. The second Article to be considered by Town Meeting will be Article 16 which proposes that the Town borrow $200,000 to be contributed toward this project. This borrowing is within the levy limit, which means that the debt service to cover this borrowing is replacing former debt service that has been paid off. As you can see, since the CPC funds have already been collected, less than half of the cost of this project will be paid from "new" tax dollars with the remaining balance to be paid by the Little League and from funds already collected by the CPC.

Cohasset has a serous shortage of playing fields. In the Spring, school baseball, softball, soccer, lacrosse and field hockey teams and town baseball, softball, soccer and lacrosse teams all have to compete for time on our few fields. If Town Meeting approves the funding of these two new ball fields, the Town will gain more than just two fields. With these new fields I expect that instead of rebuilding baseball fields at the Middle High School when the construction project is done, the fields in front and, in back of the school can be committed to the other school and town sports.

The new baseball and softball fields will be used from late March through mid August by children ages five through 17 who participate in the Cohasset Little League, the softball teams at the Middle High School and those who put together pick up games or practice with their parents. The Little League alone has about 500 baseball and softball players.

Finally, the proposed fields will include a new 80 car parking lot which will enable the town to prohibit any parking on North Main Street and thereby eliminate a dangerous situation.

The Committee and many other people have worked very hard over the last two years to put this unique private/public funded project together. We believe this project will benefit the Town as a whole as well as hundreds of children at a very low cost to taxpayers. I hope you can support us.

Mark G. DeGiacomo
President of Cohasset Youth Baseball and Softball Association, Inc.

Mr. DeGiacomo provided the Mariner with a copy of this letter.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Selectman candidates:
Why do you think some are so opposed to the proposed expansion of Cohasset Plaza? Where do you stand?

SELECTMAN/Fred Koed

Currently, the Zoning Bylaw excludes any property (with split zoning) in a floodplain, watershed protection district or water resource district from expanding into another zone. Article 21 removes that EXCLUSION, thereby permitting uses to extend from 5- to-200 feet (with a special permit) into the more restrictively-zoned areas.

Unfortunately, while attempting to serve the interests of one owner, this approach to modifying the zoning bylaw has far-reaching effects for other properties in Cohasset. Article 21 will allow any businesses to expand inside these protected districts.

The concerns of many citizens center around the fact that no one seems to be able to describe exactly "which properties" in Cohasset will be affected, or what possible new issues could arise. Cohasset needs to be very careful when considering wholesale changes to our existing zoning bylaws. The zoning bylaws are designed to protect the interests of the citizens of Cohasset and to balance the interests of citizens and businesses.

I agree that Cohasset could create a more stabilized tax base with some expansion of the commercial tax base and I support that concept. Since 93 percent of our taxable real estate is residential, most people would welcome an increase in the commercial tax base. But, until the new Master Plan is finished, I would prefer to take a more conservative approach to the expansion of commercially-zoned areas, especially those within "protected" zones.

Even with an additional $100,000 per year in tax revenue from an expanded plaza, there are too many unanswered questions concerning watershed protection. As a former Water Commissioner (1995-1998), I understand the challenges of protecting our water supplies. Unless someone can answer those questions to the satisfaction of the citizens, selectmen, water commissioners, planning board and others, I have serious reservations about this particular approach.

SELECTMAN/ Ronnie McMorris

Opposition to the expansion of the Stop & Shop Plaza has centered around the debate between the value of commercial versus residential development; fears about the impact on downtown business; and to a lesser extent, the land changes that affect wetlands and wooded areas. Every cost/benefit analysis of commercial versus residential development indicates that the tax dollars brought in by commercial properties exceed their demand for town services. Clearly, residences (other than senior housing complexes) bring school-age children and the need for additional tax dollars for their education. For these reasons, I support commercial development, where appropriate, to help lessen the tax burden on homeowners.

I have supported the revitalization of the village throughout my six years on the Board, and in recent years the downtown has thrived. We have seen that business development along 3A can coexist with downtown business, as evidenced by hardware and liquor stores. I initiated the Growth and Development Committee, which will examine these issues more in depth in the master plan process.

The physical changes which most recently occurred at the Plaza were overseen by the Conservation Commission during my years on that board. A small wetland was replaced by a larger one replicated on the property. Wildlife and plants were moved. The Plaza continues to be one of the most attractive and well-maintained properties on 3A.

Unfortunately, the proposed Town Meeting article not only allows for possible expansion of the plaza, but also affects other properties in the water resource district. Because of this, the water commissioners oppose it and so do I. The expansion of commercial zones can and should be accomplished as part of a well thought out master plan for the town.

SELECTMAN/Roger Hill

Many Cohasset residents are rightly concerned about the latest proposal to allow Cohasset Plaza to expand.

The owner of the plaza has placed a zoning-bylaw amendment article on the warrant for this year's annual town meeting. I have two major concerns about the proposal: Protection of our public drinking water supply and protection of our residential neighborhoods.

The article seeks to change an important legal protection for Cohasset's drinking water supply. If passed, the article will allow Mr. Staszko, owner of the plaza, to apply for a special permit to expand by waiving up to 200 feet, the restrictions placed on his development by our water resources protection district. The protection district boundaries were established using strict engineering guidelines. In much of the town's litigation against Cohasset Heights, those boundaries were defended at great cost. We cannot ignore the importance of protecting our public drinking water supply by changing the district lines.

I am also concerned that if this article passes, the precedent could be used by developers owning commercially-zoned land to intrude into other residential areas. These areas include the residential districts near the harbor and village, and those neighborhoods adjacent to Route 3A highway business zone, especially Brewster Road, Fair Oaks Lane, Ledgewood Drive and Rose Hill.

Not coincidentally, last week, both the Planning Board and the Water Commission each voted unanimously to oppose the Cohasset Plaza article. I feel strongly we should follow the direction of these two elected bodies — the boards with the direct responsibility for protection of our residential areas and our water supply, respectively.

We need to continue to protect our public water supply and our residential neighborhoods. That is why I am against the Cohasset Plaza expansion article.

School Committee candidate:
Since Education Reform, has the School Committee become a rubber stamp for the Superintendent of Schools?

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Jane Pescatore

With the advent of Education Reform in Massachusetts, administrators in school systems across the Commonwealth became "site" managers with both responsibility and accountability for the buildings and people under their supervision. At the same time, the Superintendent of Schools assumed overall responsibility and accountability for the entire school system. The final tier in this organizational structure is the School Committee. This group has the responsibility to determine the contract and compensation package of the Superintendent of Schools. Unlike those of us who have worked in the business sector, where we typically have only one "boss," the Superintendent has the daunting task of reporting to a group of five individuals who all have widely different backgrounds, experience and expectations.

If a casual observer were to tune in or drop by a School Committee meeting, they might get the impression that the Superintendent is running the meeting.

They would be right. He is, after all, the "expert" the School Committee has hired to run the school system. The Town has an analogous situation with the Town Manager. Anyone who watches a Selectman's meeting would have the definite impression that the Town Manager is running that meeting. He is the "expert" they have hired to manage the Town.

Both the School Committee and the Board of Selectmen are comprised of volunteer citizens. As such they do not have the in-depth expertise required to manage the complex structure that is an outstanding school system or a well-run town government. These groups do, however, have the responsibility and accountability to hire and oversee these managers to insure their continued excellent performance.

Next week's questions:

Selectman candidates:
How can the Town Manager's 12 percent raise be justified in these tough fiscal times?

School Committee candidate:
There's a move afoot to include MCAS results on student transcripts for college applications. Is the MCAS an accurate measurement of a student's ability, knowledge-level or both?

Responses should be brief — no more than 300 words — and must be received by 5 p.m., Monday. Candidates are asked to be specific and make every word count. Submissions will be cut if they exceed the word limit. (We use the word-count feature on the computer to determine the number of words.)Candidates may reply by e-mail at mford@cnc.com; by fax at 781-741-2931, or by dropping off their responses at the Cohasset Mariner office in the Hingham Journal Building, 73 South St., Hingham Square. Items may also be dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street. However they choose to deliver their answers, candidates should adhere to the 5 p.m. Monday deadline.

We will also publish a weekly Candidates' Corner, which will be limited to a few paragraphs (about 150 words), from any candidate who chooses to submit dates of coffees, fund-raisers and the like. All candidates opposed or unopposed, who have not already done so, are invited to submit photographs and formal statements announcing their candidacies.

The Mariner will not accept letters to the editor from candidates or letters endorsing or attacking particular candidates. The Mariner will publish letters about campaign issues from citizens not seeking election.

If you have questions, or would like to suggest a Question of the Week, call Mary Ford at 781-741-2933 or contact her by e-mail at mford@cnc.com.

The perils of being a lefty

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I read in the Los Angeles Times the other day that the folks who have time on their hands and nothing better to do have been studying left-handers again.

"People who grow up left-handed have a different, more flexible brain structure than those born to take life by the right hand, say researchers at the University of California, Los Angeles.

(That's UCLA to football and basketball fans, who will be surprised to learn that they have researchers as well as 300-pound tackles and 7-foot centers at the school.)

"The reason is that right-handers have genes that force their brains into a slightly more one-sided structure, according to research published yesterday in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences."

I'm not sure what all that means but I guarantee you nothing good will come of it for lefties, who have been ranked on by the majority right-ies ever since Og, son of Fire, was hooted as he dragged his woman home by the hair with his left hand.

I'm particularly sensitive to this because I think I'm left-handed.

I say I think I am because, while I eat right-handed, if someone gets in the way of my right elbow when I'm chowing down at a lunch counter, I can switch to my left-hand without missing a forkful of mashed potatoes.

Left is "gauche" in French, which has been adopted by the English-speaking world as the word for lacking in social grace...

I throw a baseball with my right hand but the first time I broke my right arm I found that I could throw just as easily with my left, although the switch took a little something off my fastball and I couldn't snap off a curve.

Yet I use a scissors with my left hand and, as I write this on my PC, I am pushing the mouse around with my left hand, which causes all sorts of logistical problems at an office where I share a computer with a right-handed co-worker.

I have a hunch I was born left-handed but, as was the custom in my childhood (when ice covered most of the earth), my folks took one horrified look as I reached for my rattle with my left hand and converted me on the spot. that left me lefty in all the little things they didn't notice, like when I went to work for Larry Stone's Skeeball concession at Paragon Park, I found I was most adept at skeeballing left-handed, hitting the 50-point hole with regularity.

Lefties have been getting the short end of the stick from the time that Latin was spoken from both ends of the Roman Empire. In fact, the word "sinister," meaning threatening or ominous or portending evil, is derived from the Latin "sinister," meaning "on the left side."

Left is "gauche" in French, which has been adopted by the English-speaking world as the word for lacking in social grace; "out in left field" has come to describe someone who doesn't know what he or she is talking about.

And so it goes.

Maybe the next researchers will discover something good about left-handedness. You think?

Opening dam helps control pollution

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Each year Denis McNulty and his wife Doris make up a schedule to have the Public Works Department open Cat Dam at the south end of Nichols Road. The purpose of opening the dam periodically is to flush the upper part of Little Harbor to control pollution. The dam is usually opened at the time of the full moon to take advantage of the high spring tides which contribute to greater tidal flushing.

The following is the schedule for Cat Dam opening and closing;

April 24, 25, 26	Wednesday, Thursday, Friday
May 27, 28, 29	Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday
June 26, 27, 28	Wednesday, Thursday, Friday
July 22, 23, 24	Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday
Aug. 13, 14, 15	Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday
Sept. 9, 10, 11	Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday
Oct. 7, 8, 9	Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday
Nov. 4, 5, 6	Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday
Dec. 2, 3, 4	Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday

In addition to the above schedule, Cat Dam is left open January through April and sometimes in late June to reduce the nutrient buildup in this estuary, thereby controlling the algae blooms to which it is subject.

Recently completed Little Harbor Studies have shown high levels of nutrients in the water of Upper Little Harbor. The application of fertilizer and chemicals from lawns, as well as other practices such as dumping grass clippings and other debris near this sensitive body of water have contributed to this problem. Estimates indicate that as much as 50 percent of the nitrates causing the eutrophication of water bodies such as Little Harbor come from agricultural treatment. Other causes are failed septic systems and surface water runoff from impermeable surfaces such as roofs and driveways. The facts are that Upper Little Harbor can tolerate almost no additional nitrogen from fertilizer since the soils which surround it cannot absorb the nutrients from such lawn maintenance practices.

There is a direct correlation between the over fertilization of lawns adjacent to water bodies and the algae blooms in those water bodies. According to the EPA, between 50 and 90 percent of the fertilizer put on lawns leaches through lawn to the ground water or becomes surface runoff. So called maintenance fertilization recommendations by most lawn care agencies (Scot's, etc.) would result in the application of slightly less than a quarter ton of fertilizer per acre. Lawn care specialists adopt this practice as routine, and are a major part of the problem. No nearby water body can withstand such a nutrient load.

In view of the increased pressure to further develop land abutting Little Harbor, (creating increased areas of non-permeable surface by enlarging buildings; new driveways, etc.,) it's imperative for each of us to rethink the application of lawn chemicals to our property. This trend can be stopped if everyone realized that a perfect lawn is not a necessary concomitant to living the good life.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Where was I when life went by?

MY VIEW

EVAN SCHIFF

Complete and utter shock don't completely capture what I felt. Amazement, maybe. Sent into a deep stupor, definitely. What happened? Well, let me start from the beginning.

Last week, I went home to Philadelphia for a family function that happened to be close to the overnight camp I worked at as a counselor for two years. Suffice to say, when I went back "up the mountain," I was flooded by a wave of nostalgia.

I fondly remembered counselors I worked with and campers I tormented, and had a wonderful time reminiscing with a few friends who remain on the mountain throughout the year. I left feeling peaceful, whole, warm and fulfilled. It was a great night.

When I came back to Boston I was not only greeted by a biting chill but also a nagging feeling that I wanted to reconnect with those who have slowly evaporated from my life. Not everyone mind you, just the ones I still catch myself thinking about. While they may have had a diminishing role in my consciousness over the years, their importance could never be completely extinguished.

So, I wrote to a few, heard from less, which is about what I expected. But then, I was thrown off my semi-reclinable work chair. I wrote to a girl I had dated (as much as one can while stationed at camp) more than four years ago. We were close, had good times and eventually faded into the recesses of each others photo albums. I wrote her that I was a writer (I heard girls like that) and thinking of moving to California to be a surfer (another plus I thought) and if she was around I'd love to grab a drink.

This is what I got back. "Dear Evan, wonderful to hear from you. I'm currently living in Washington State and engaged to be married in Oct."

What?! How could that be?!

I've struggled with how to express how strange this seemed to me. My boss, parents and friends all seemed to be in agreement that I am one can short of a six-pack for getting bent out of shape. So I sat back and examined what I was feeling. Regret, no. Wistfulness, not really. Misplaced macho pride, nah.

I guess what struck me is how two paths can stray so drastically from one another in such a short time. Four years ago I was a teenager, excited about my next year of college at Boston University and she shared my feelings for her term at the University of New Hampshire.

And now she's evidently ready for the responsibilities of life, while I'm not even sure I'm dependable enough to make plans for tomorrow. I mean, I consider getting to work every morning a small triumph — but marriage, that's as far from my mind as the Pats winning the Super Bowl again.

I'm not doubting her intentions, convictions or commitment, just wondering if mine aren't where they should be. I am dumbfounded that someone who was at one time on the same page as me is now on the next chapter.

I guess I'm slowly coming to the realization that time relentlessly marches on even if you're no where near the parade.

Evan Schiff is the staff reporter for the Cohasset Mariner.

Jackson takes over the reins as new police chief

Sworn in last Friday

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It looked and sounded more like a family reunion than a solemn, swearing-in ceremony for the town's new Police Chief, Robert W. Jackson.

Four generations of the Jackson family along with their close friends jammed the selectmen's office last Friday for what was a proud moment for them, and one town officials also felt good about.

"He's a good man," said Selectman Merle Brown. "He knows the townspeople and that's important in a small town, especially in the job of police chief.."

Outgoing chief Brian Noonan, who competed with Jackson for the post nine years ago when then Chief Joseph Kealey retired, said Jackson was a perfect fit.

"With his military background and all his experience here, he'll do a great job," said Noonan. "I wish him well."

Outgoing chief Brian Noonan, who competed with Jackson for the post nine years ago when then Chief Joseph Kealey retired, said Jackson was a perfect fit.

Jackson, who served as the department's sergeant and was selected from a field of some 54 candidates, thanked Town Manager Mark Haddad for giving him the opportunity to take on new challenges. He also thanked his family and friends for their support, the selectmen, the selection committee including Norwell Police Chief Robert Galvin, and Noonan "for a job well done and for his 28 years of service to the Cohasset Police Department."

Charlene Jackson said she was proud of her son.

"I'm very proud and happy," she said. "He loves Cohasset. We came here when he was in the seventh-grade and it's a really special town to him."

Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed said he has known Jackson for a number of years.

"I'm looking forward to working with him," he said.

Jackson, who lives on Ash Street with is wife Diane, holds a bachelor of arts in political science from the University of Virginia, a bachelor of science in law enforcement from Northeastern University, graduated from the Police Academy in Brockton in 1980 and completed a command training program at Babson College last year.

Jackson, who retired recently with 30 years in the U.S. Navy reserves, gave Haddad a start just before the ceremony.

"The Navy called," Jackson joked, as Haddad blanched.

"Just kidding," he said.

Haddad has two other major appointments ahead: Fire Chief Roger Lincoln and DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield are also retiring this year.

Jackson's total annual compensation will be $85,000, Haddad said.

COMMON GROUND

AMY WHORF MCGUIGGAN

By any name, this 'lady' is the world's favorite bug

Ladybug, ladybug, flyaway home ... your house is on fire, and your children will burn!
— Old children's rhyme

For those of us with old, drafty houses (and we wouldn't have it any other way, would we?) the cold days of winter invite any number of critters to spend time in our walls, windows and basements. I always know when the mice have taken up residence. My cat sits, frozen with anticipation, staring at the living room wall, listening to them scratching and scurrying. I remember one winter when I opened a closet door only to find all the shoes filled with the cat's dry food. I had never stopped to question why the cat's bowl was always empty, never imagined that the mice had been shuttling food, bit by bit, across the still of the night. This winter, the mice have been at it again, making midnight raids in my cellar, removing all the seeds from a large bunch of Chinese lanterns I had drying.

Mice aren't the only guests. Also squeezing in through cracks and crevices to hunker down and escape the cold, is the diminutive insect that is universally admired not only for the help it gives farmers and gardeners in the battle against pests, but also as an enduring symbol of good fortune.

The ladybug - not a true bug, but rather a beetle - is a member of the order Coleoptera, meaning "sheath-winged," the largest group of animals on earth, and the family Coccinellidae, meaning "little red sphere." Also known as the lady beetle and ladybird, the ladybug is distributed world-wide and is said to have been given its name by European farmers during the Middle Ages who had watched, helplessly, as their crops were destroyed by aphids (also known as plant lice) and scale insects that sucked juices and transmitted viruses. Prayers to the Virgin Mary to save the crops were answered with the arrival of the ladybug, a natural enemy of the pests. The farmers called their flying savior the "Beetle of Our Lady."

Since then, much folklore has attached to the ladybug. The children's rhyme, "Ladybug, ladybug, fly away home ... your house is on fire, and your children will burn!" refers to the practice by English farmers of setting fire to hops vines at the end of the harvest season to clear the fields of old vines and colonies of aphids. The rhyme was a warning to lingering ladybugs, scavenging for a few last aphids, to fly before being consumed by the fire.

In colonial America, a ladybug found in the house during the winter was considered good fortune. In European cultures it was believed that ladybugs, not storks, brought babies. Other traditions believed that ladybugs understood human language. Norse legend claimed that the ladybug came to earth on a bolt of lightning. No doubt because of its effectiveness in ridding crops of pests, the ladybug became a universal symbol of good luck, bringing not only bountiful crops but fair weather, romance and marriage and good health. Killing or brushing away a ladybug was said to bring only sadness and misfortune.

Of the more than 5,000 species of ladybug, 400 hundred live in North America. Measuring about the size of a pencil eraser and oval-domed or round-domed in shape, ladybugs are easily recognized by their shiny red, orange or yellow coloration and their black spots, the number of which differentiate the species. Locally, our two most common ladies (and gentlemen) are the Two-spotted ladybug (Adalia bipunctata), which happens to be the state insect of Massachusetts, and the Convergent ladybug (Hippodamia convergens) with its 13 spots.

The ladybug life cycle, counterclockwise from top: egg cluster, larva (grub), pupa (resting stage), adult

Like all beetles, the ladybug has a four-stage, complete metamorphosis life cycle. In early spring, adults lay as many as 300, oval-shaped yellow eggs in clusters of 25 to 50. Attached upright to foliage - particularly to foliage infested with aphids - the eggs hatch between five and 10 days later and the ferocious-looking grubs - some folks say they look like little alligators - begin feeding voraciously on aphids and scale insects, each grub consuming as many as 25 pests per day. About two weeks after hatching, and after several molts of exoskeleton, the larvae attach themselves to branches or leaves and begin the non-feeding, resting pupa stage, emerging as adults some two weeks later. Soft and dull-colored, the adults are vulnerable until their protective pair of wing sheaths, called elytra, harden and take on their characteristic sheen. As adults, each will consume 50 to 75 pests per day, several times their own weight.

For protection, ladybugs have been endowed with the bright colors that warn predators to stay away. Known as "warning coloration," red, orange, yellow and black pigmentations are signals that the prey will be foul tasting, poisonous or able to defend itself. The monarch butterfly and the skunk are two well-known examples of warning coloration. Birds avoid the monarch butterfly whose toxicity is derived from its favorite food, the milkweed. Skunks, as we all know, have their own special way of defending themselves. Ladybugs, when threatened (and that includes handling by humans), ooze a foul-smelling liquid (it's actually their blood) from their leg joints. They may also play dead when they sense danger.

As summer's supply of aphids dwindles and winter sets in, large swarms of ladybugs seek out logs, rocks, leaves, eaves, cracks and crevices - including window spaces - in which to huddle and hibernate. With spring's renewal and a replenished supply of aphids, scale insects and mites, the ladybugs emerge from dormancy to live out the last days of their lives in a frenzy of eating, mating and egg laying.

Any day now, those of us with drafty houses should start seeing ladybugs congregating on window frames in preparation for their return to the great outdoors. We can help them along by opening the windows and carefully brushing them out (a feather duster works well), taking care not to aggravate them. They can also be vacuumed, with a non-wheel-type vacuum, and released immediately outdoors, if you'll be sorry to see these jewels of color depart, be patient. The invisible pheromone trail that led them into your home last fall may well attract a new generation this fall. And if the aphids enjoy your roses as much as they do mine, you're certain to have ladybugs hanging around all summer long.

The two Cohasset High gymnasts both came up with big efforts at Sunday's All-State championships. Sheerin, a senior, took sixth in the all-around after overcoming a shaky showing in her uneven bars routine to advance to the Senior Nationals, which takes place May 16-17 in Las Vegas. Bixby, a junior, took a rock solid sixth in her top event, the vault.

Bourne ends Cinderella run for Skippers, 3-1

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CN.COM

It was like waiting for a punch line that never came.

Even after Bourne took a lead a mere 108 seconds in and then retook it at 2-1with 3:28 remaining in the second period of Thursday's Div. 3 semifinal showdown at the Bridgewater Ice arena, the Cohasset High faithful remained largely nonplussed. Indeed, who could blame this passionate contingent who'd watched their hockey team outscore opponents 156-20 on the way to an unbeaten 20-0-1 season for believing the boys in blue would eventually get it going.

But the wait never ended. In fact, it seems fair to say the first true sense of panic didn't begin to set in for most of the C.H.S. fans until Bourne's Ryan Buckley walked out from behind the Cohasset net on the power play 3:21 into the third period and slipped the puck between the pads of goalie Dan Kinchla to make it a 3-1 game.

Did Bourne's coaching staff figure out some weakness none of Cohasset's previous 21 victims had or was it simply a case of their players doing a better job of executing the plan of attack? Either way, what resulted was the Skippers' heretofore high-powered offense never really getting on track. Cohasset managed a season-low 26 shots on net for the game, and only a handful of those truly tested Bourne netminder Marc Jackson.

The Canalmen's defensive end clampdown began with the sterling play of disciplined stay-at-home defensemen, most notably senior all-stars Josh Connors and Sean Barrett. Augmenting this area of strength, Bourne coaches short shifted three lines, and designed a game plan which relied on relentless body play and back checking — all of which served to neutralize Cohasset's superior skating ability.

"We thought we had the edge in terms of skating, but we just couldn't get the goals," said Cohasset coach Dennis Walsh, a simple and direct answer from the man whose 30-year coaching career at C.H.S. came to an end with the loss.

Walsh, 62, who retired from teaching at Cohasset High last year but hung around for one final go round on the ice, felt the lack of playoff experience for his charges against

The defense doesn't rest

Backline heroics for explosive hockey squad should not be overshadowed

This year's outstanding Cohasset High hockey team was known across Eastern Mass as a fearsome scoring machine. The Skippers boasted three of the top four scorers in the South Shore League in 2001-'02, and surpassed the previous school record for goals in a season by their 12th of 22 games.

They started things with a bang, outscoring their first three opponents of the year by a combined score of 23-0, and never really seemed to let up offensively. Many hockey fans in Cohasset will be blown away by the 23. But the more avid Ice Skipper fans will tell you that the Zero, is just as, if not more, impressive.

"I don't think the defense has gotten nearly enough recognition," praised senior All-Star goalie Dan Kinchla of the fantastic defense in front of him. "Without them, nothing would have happened this year."

Kinchla was the chief beneficiary of this stellar defense this year, racking up 10 shutouts, including one against Scituate, a team Cohasset had not beaten in many years. Still, the shutouts were as much a credit to the defense as they were to the fine goalkeeping of Kinchla.

The work of seniors Eric Libby and Tim Straughn, both starters, and no-brainer selections to this year's SSL All-Star team, kept opponent shot counts to a minimum. One glowing example of this mastery in their own end was put forth when the Skippers took on 2001 Div. 3 State Champs, Hanover. The Boys in Blue out-shot the Indians 15-2 in the first period en route to a stunning 5-4 victory.

"Our five defenders worked very well with [Kinchla] with great communication," said longtime hockey coach Dennis Walsh, who coached the final game of his 38 year career last Thursday.

Senior Will Moody, junior Mike Calorio, and sophomore standout Mike Devine all played key roles in the remarkably low goals against total for the Skippers. Kinchla held opponents to 0.8 goals per game, first in the South Shore League, ahead of second place Ryan O'Shaughnessy

Whether he won or lost, coach Walsh did it the right way

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

There aren't a whole lot of things Dennis Walsh didn't see in his 28 years of coaching high school hockey. One of those was a sectional or state championship.

The longtime Cohasset High bench walker felt he had a legitimate shot at adding that distinction to his resume when he opened this year's state tourney with a team that whipped through the regular season for an unbeaten 19-0-1 campaign, outscoring the opposition by a mind-numbing 156-20 edge.

Unfortunately, the dream died for good when Walsh officially entered retirement last Thursday, his Skippers 3-1 losers to Bourne in the Div. 3 sectional semifinals.

Surely, at least a hint of heartbreak came with the career-ending loss, but Walsh gave as convincing an act of hiding it as any parent could have hoped for…his instincts to protect the kids running strong through the end.

"This was a great, great year for me, and nothing can take away from that," said Walsh, 62, who actually retired from teaching at Cohasset High last spring after a 30 years in education, but returned for one last hurrah on the ice.

Following Thursday's loss, Walsh thanked his players for a great season and implored them to eschew any regrets.

"What's to regret," he said later. "The kids worked extremely hard. We went unbeaten a year after not even making the tourney, and we did some great things. One tough-luck loss should take away from that? I don't think so."

Even the generally stoic Walsh couldn't help admitting, however, to a little emotional jolt as he walked off the ice for the final time as a coach Thursday night trailing his players, and looking up in to the packed stands at Bridgewater's Ice Arena to a loud ovation from the Cohasset hockey faithful.

"That was just a great feeling," he said. "It was a nice way to end it. An unbeaten season, great kids, great parental involvement,

Sheerin qualifies for Nationals

Cohasset gymnasts Bixby and Sheerin stand tall at All-States

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset gymnastics stars Kristin Sheerin and Meredith Bixby put an exclamation point on an outstanding season with their performances at the All-State Individuals Competition on March 10.

Sheerin, a senior, took sixth in the all-around competition, and junior Bixby turned in another sixth place effort in the vault. Both had excellent seasons, being named to the South Shore League All-Star team and leading the combined Cohasset-Norwell gymnastics squad to its first SSL Title since the towns merged.

At the event on Sunday, Sheerin overcame a shaky bars routine (8.15 score) to launch herself back into contention with what Bixby called "her best beam routine of the season."

Sheerin admitted that for the last five meets, she had been unable to land the first move in her routine, a back layout. When she landed it right in the start of her competition at All-States, Sheerin knew that things were looking up.

"I was very nervous," said the six time All-Star of having to attempt the back layout. "But once I stuck it, it really got the ball rolling. Three out of my four events were pretty good."

Sheerin scored a 9.35 on the beam, followed by an 8.65 average score for her two vaults. She then ended the day with her strongest event, scoring a 9.15 on the floor routine.

The excellent finish was a very sweet one for Sheerin, who also took sixth at All-States as a sophomore. However, a costly fall during her bars routine knocked her out of the top six last year.

Coupled with her very solid effort two weeks ago at the team South Sectionals, Sheerin's All-State performance got her named to the Senior Nationals, which takes place May 16-17 in Las Vegas. She is one of eight seniors in Massachusetts to be tabbed for this honor, but really was an easy selection to the team after finishing third among seniors in the All-Around competition, with a 35.3.

At Nationals, Sheerin hopes to compete in the beam and floor, and possibly vault as well. Among the eight ladies on the squad, two will compete for the All-Around title, and the rest will be known as "event specialists." Two of the event specialists will be friends of the perennial post-season power Bourne squad made the biggest difference in the match-up.

"If we'd played the way we did in just about any of our regular season game I think we would have won this game," noted Walsh, who hadn't directed a team to the post-season in several years. "I think the pressure of losing was in the back of the minds of too many of our players who'd never been in that kind of do-or-die situation before. We were a little cautious in some ways, and then we had a few other players trying to do a little too much. That was the nerves showing."

Last year's Skippers team finished one win shy of post-season qualification. Walsh says he honestly believes if they'd earned that one additional victory, and played even one post-season game, this year's story would've been a lot different.

"You could see it in the way they played: they were too up," Walsh continued with his analysis of Thursday's loss. "They didn't know how to handle the extra emotion. It's too bad, because I really feel this team had the talent to play a lot longer."

The Skippers opened the game tentative, so it really didn't come as all that big a surprise when Bourne leading scorer Jared Kent (21 goals, 24 assists in the regular season) punched one past Cohasset goalie Dan Kinchla just 1:48 in.

Not long after this, the stronger and faster skating Skippers began to take control of the game in terms of both possession and territory. However, they could not get much going to the net against Bourne's hard hitting, packed-in defense.

Cohasset finally caught a break with 3:21 to go in the opening frame when the puck popped back to sophomore defenseman Mike Devine at the right point following a concentrated assault on Jackson. Devine let fly with the puck on edge causing it to flutter, which seemed to throw off Jackson's timing as the reach from his knees toward the top corner came a hair late.

The Skippers continued to pound it in to their offensive end to open the second, this being particularly true when the top line of Greg O'Connell, John Durkin and Rob Carpenter was on the ice. It was after a prolonged flurry in front of the Bourne net and a kick-out save by Jackson off of an O'Connell putback attempt that Buckley was able to scoop up the long carom and start a two-on-one break that would end with a centering pass to Mike Folino, and a quick wrister past Kinchla to make it 2-1with 3:28 to go in the second.

Devine was whistled for a questionable roughing penalty 1:38 into the third period, and Buckley made the Skippers pay just 15 seconds later, as he took a pass behind the net from Folino and surprised Kinchla by quickly circling out on his forehand to tuck it home for the backbreaker.

"That was the goal that really hurt," noted Walsh. "Up until then, we'd been skating pretty well, and figured we had a pretty good chance of getting at least one more goal, but I think that took the wind out of our sails a little."

Still, the Skippers would not go quietly, their aggressive, hard-rushing play drawing a pair of Bourne penalties in the waning minutes. Both O'Connell and Carpenter were able to get off clean, point-blank shots on the power play, and Devine and Ted Straughn each teed it up from the point with a couple of well placed slappers, but Jackson proved equal to it all.

"It goes back to what I always say about the post-season: anything can happen," said Walsh, a day removed from the loss. "There's so much emotion. One bounce that goes this way or that, one kid who really rises to the occasion like Bourne's goalie did, can make all the difference."

The newly ex-coach continued on without the prompting of another question.

"It was a great season, though, and this loss shouldn't take away from that for the kids," he said. "I know it won't for me. No one should have any regrets."

of Norwell, with a GA rate of 3.3.

Walsh credits his defensive lines with great speed and aggressiveness.

Against Bishop Feehan last Tuesday in the South Sectional Quarterfinals, the Shamrocks did all they could just to get the puck down inside the Skipper blue line.

Kinchla also showed an aggressive spirit, when he edged out 15 feet from the goal to make a spectacular save in the semi-final loss to Bourne.

"We were putting everything on the line," noted Kinchla of the 3-1defeat at the hands of the third-seeded Canalmen. "It just seemed like the right thing to do."

Cohasset's defense made Kinchla's job even easier by pitching in a great deal on offense as well. Tim Straughn, who many feel possessed the best slap shot in the SSL, racked up 27 points this year, good for fifth on the team in scoring.

Even with the tremendous support of the defense, Kinchla has worked for everything he has gotten this year. Although he did not start playing high school hockey until his junior year, Kinchla began attending Joe Bertagna's goalie school in Hingham and playing in the South Shore Coaches Summer League prior to this.

Now, with the hockey post season in the books, Kinchla can turn his attention to track, where he hopes to compete at States in the one and two mile races. He currently has Loyola-Baltimore as his first choice of schools, and has talked to the track coach from a number of others, including Providence and Merrimack.

Speaking of the goaltender's position in hockey, Walsh asserted: "It is the most stressful position of any sport. But we were very pleased with (Kinchla) this year. He worked very hard."

great fan support. That's a pretty good way to go out, eh?"

"Eh?" That's right, a remnant of his Canadian heritage. Walsh spent the first 29 years of his life north of the border. He attended St. Francis Xavier College in Nova Scotia, where he played football and hockey. He took his first teaching and coaching jobs, both football and hockey, in Quebec in 1963. Two years later, he moved to take on a similar position at St. Michael's College in Toronto, the premier school for junior hockey at the time.

The wanderlust struck again a few years later and Walsh sent out resumes to a number of New England high schools. A few job offers came his way, but he chose Cohasset — as much as anything else, he said, because of his love for the ocean. So in 1969, he moved his wife, Katherine, and two toddler sons, Chris and Tim, to a new home in Scituate.

"I figured when I came to Cohasset, it would be for a year or two," Walsh noted with a chuckle. "You know how it is when you're young. You want to see different things."

Obviously, the Walshs fell in love with the area. Dennis and Katherine had two more children, a third son, Bob, now 31, and finally a daughter, Angela, now 29. All four of their children remain local, and there are now five grandchildren in the mix as well.

In his first 11 years at C.H.S., Walsh served as an assistant coach in both football and hockey, but then left coaching for five years so that he could follow the athletic careers of his own children. He returned as Cohasset's head hockey coach in 1985.

So, now that there are no professional considerations keeping them here, any chance of the Walsh's returning to the old country?

"Nope, we love it here," said Walsh, 62, in a phone interview from his Scituate home. "This is home now. We love the area and the we've got a lot of friends. It's also great to keep in contact with so many of the kids I coached and taught."

Not that these are the only things convincing him to stick around.

"You've got some great high school hockey around here," he added. "I'm looking forward to following Cohasset hockey for a lot more years. You'll still see me at a lot of games, and I'd love to come out to a few practices."

Clearly, he'd still be welcome.

"Dennis Walsh is one of most respected people this school system has ever seen," said Cohasset High Athletic Direcotor Ron Ford. "I can't tell you how many people were thrilled to see Dennis go out with a team like this. The kids really wanted it too. You could tell they worked extra hard, knowing this was his last season. They wanted to do something special for him."

Echoed Scituate's Mike Breen, a head coach at the opposite end of the spectrum, in just his second year at the helm: "Dennis Walsh is a guy who did it right. He's an excellent coach, but he was an even better guy. Whether his teams were winning or not, he was always a class act, and the same went for his kids. I was so happy for him getting to go out with a team like that. He deserved it."

Despite the age difference and the fact that most of the charges he had on the ice he also had at one time or another in his math class, there genuinely seemed to be a real sense of relation between coach and kids.

"Hockey was fun to him, and that's what I think helped him connect with us," offered senior captain Eric Libby, a South Shore League All-Star defenseman who will be attending St. Michael's College in Vermont next fall. "Teaching was one thing, but when he was at the rink, he was like a kid too. He really seemed to want to get to know us and be a part of everything. He's just a great guy. They'll miss him around here next season."

Sheerin's who work out with her at the Ellis School of Gymnastics in Braintree: Nikki Pedretti and Jen Klier, both of Weymouth.

More than 20 states will send the top senior female gymnasts to Las Vegas to compete for the National Crown, the title the Massachusetts team won last year.

Bixby performed extremely well in her best event, the vault, taking sixth place with an averaged score of 8.55. Bixby surprised opponents by sticking her vault, the tuck tsuk, after never having completed it the entire year.

Bixby has been named to the South Shore League All-Star team all three years she has been eligible. Her consistent performances earned her a captaincy for next year's team, as she will no doubt be Coh-Nor's top All-Around competitor.

The one downside is that she will be attempting to patch up the gaping hole left by the graduation of Sheerin.

"Kristin was one of the best gymnasts Cohasset has ever had," asserted Bixby, who also trains at Ellis with Sheerin. "No one will be able to fulfill what she did."

Still, next year's team should be quite solid, with Bixby leading a core of talented juniors, including Katherine Coyne and Sarah Dennis, who missed this year with a broken wrist. There should be some excellent freshmen and sophomores emerging on the varsity scene, like Nancy Durkin and Jen Guiney of Norwell.

She was mother of the late Patricia Crerie.

A funeral Mass was celebrated at St. Theresa Church, Sagamore. Interment was in St. Peter's Cemetery, Sandwich.

Arrangements were by the Nickerson-Bourne Funeral Homes of Sandwich.

In lieu of flowers, memorial gifts may be made to the March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation, 895 Mary Dunn Road, Hyannis, 02601.

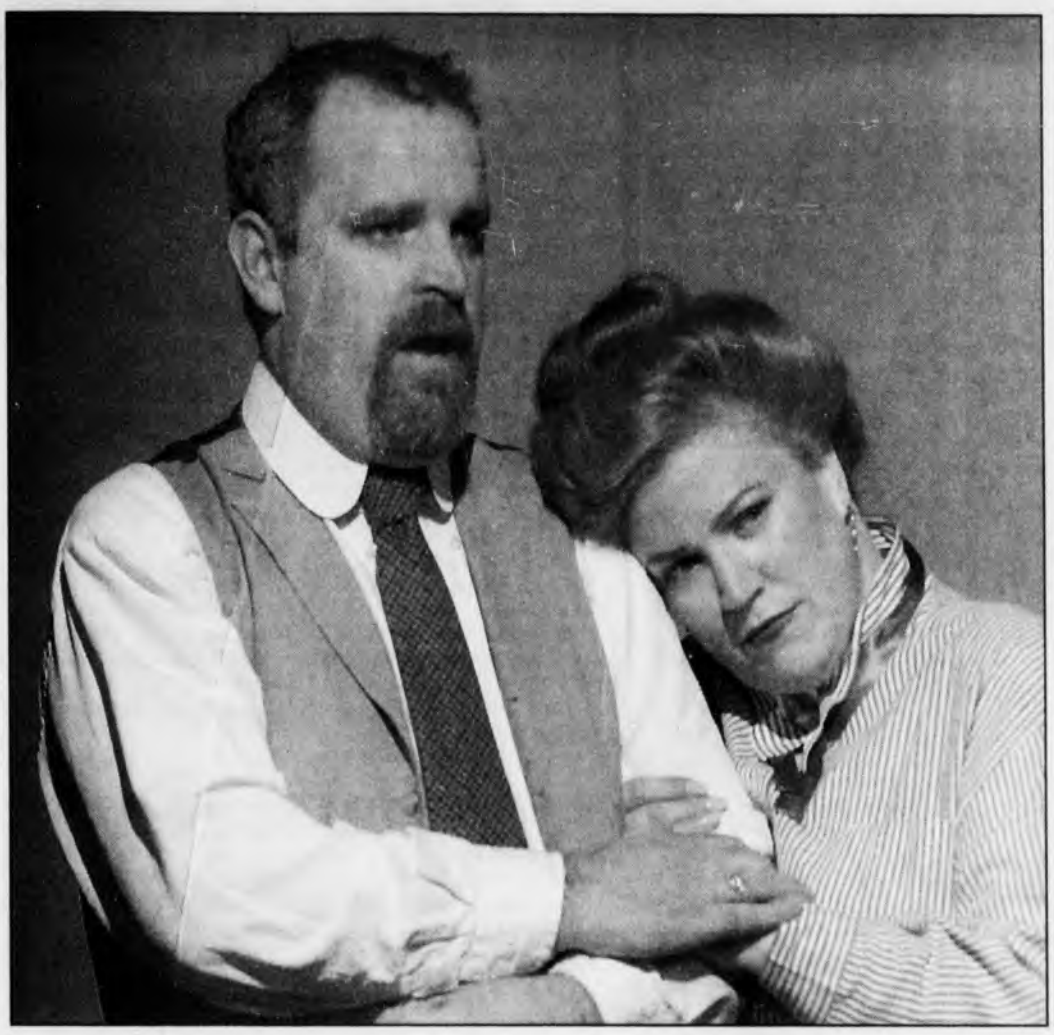
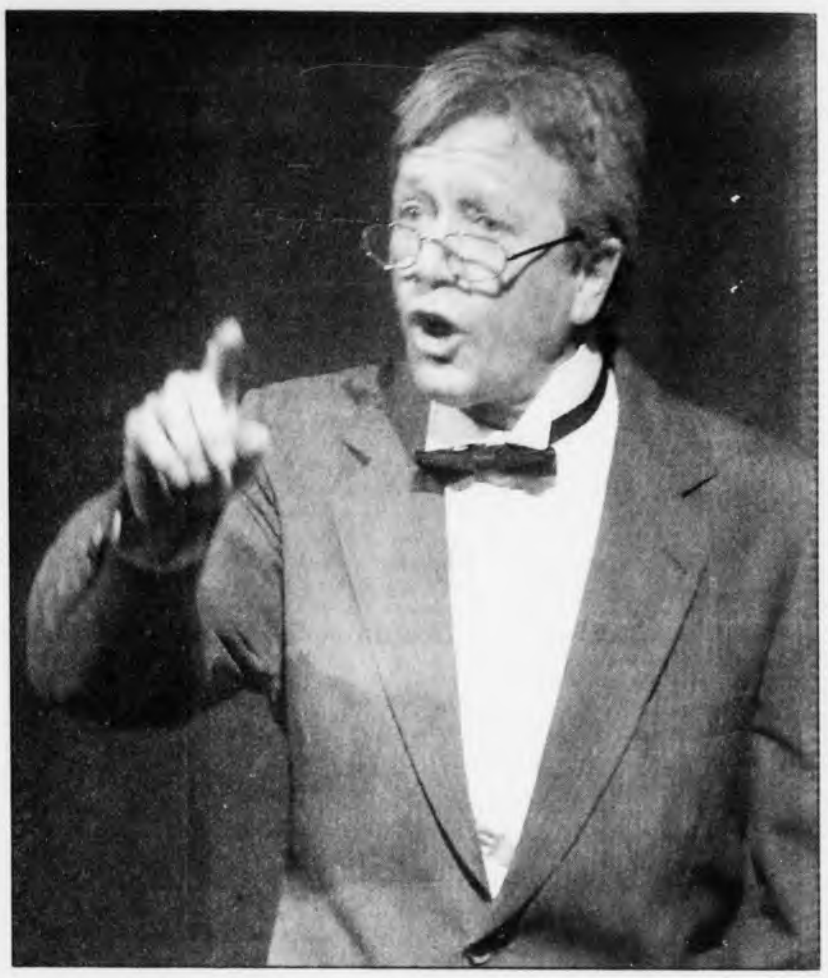
'Our Town' mirrors a time of innocence

The CDC production has received rave reviews. Tickets for March 15 & 16 at 8p.m. are $10 and can be purchased at Front Street Books in Scituate, Buttonwood Books in Cohasset, at the door and by phone at 781-585-9158.





Clockwise from top left: Dr. and Mrs. Gibbs (Michael Cox and Jessica McDonald) commiserate over their son's wedding and losing their boy. The American classic provides a glimpse into the time before the world wars. Professor Willard played by Bruce Wilson tells the audience about Grovers Corners and invites them to visit the museum at "any reasonable hour." Mrs. Gibbs (Jessica McDonald) and Mrs. Webb (Caroline Crooker) talk about canning beans. The play continues Friday and Saturday night at Town Hall. Stage manager Dick Sherrell narrates the story that provides a loving picture of American life.. Joseph Rota as Simon Stimon leads the choir in the Pulitzer Prize winning Thorton Wilder play about life in a small town.

Designer Steve Tibbetts has big things in store for visitors to the New England Flower Show.

A taste of the tropics

Local designer goes with the flow in flower show exhibit

By Gregory Mathis
GMATHIS@CNC.COM

Steve Tibbetts is hoping to make a splash this week at the 131st New England Flower Show — a big splash.

The Marshfield artist behind many of the South Shore's impressive water gardens, fountains and manmade waterfalls, will pump thousands upon thousands of gallons of water from high atop the Bayside Exposition Center ceiling and through his exotic exhibit beginning this weekend.

"Anybody else would be scared to do this," said Tibbetts, owner of Steve Tibbetts Custom Design in Norwell. But Tibbetts appears undaunted by the task of creating a tropical rainforest scene complete with a towering waterfall that uses 30,000 gallons of re-circulated water.

"Instead of being the star of the show, I could shut it down," he said jokingly. "I've put a lot of pressure on myself."

Adding to the pressure is the spot Tibbetts has landed for the flower show — front and center.

"I've got a reputation for being a little out of control," Tibbetts said. "I told them I would do it if they gave me a good spot and they gave me a good spot."

Tibbetts' exhibit, totaling just under 1,000 square feet, will be one of the first displays to greet visitors at the entrance of the Boston venue.

Katie Campbell, president of the Spring Flower Show for the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, said the waterfall has a sound that will draw people into the show, which was one of the reasons for placing Tibbetts' exhibit near the front.

"We knew he'd be up to the challenge of being at the entrance," Campbell said. "Typically water features are very popular."

If anyone can pull it off it's Tibbetts, who is participating in the Spring Flower Show on his own for the first time. Two years ago, Tibbetts took part in the flower show with the New England Wildflower Society.

"Steve is very well known for his water displays," Campbell said. "He is known for his ability to do floor to ceiling displays."

The scaffolding Tibbetts will use to create his waterfall is 18 feet high and the exhibit will resemble something you would find on a tropical island.

"It'll be like you're walking into Costa Rica," Tibbetts said of the display. "There will be a lot of force and a lot of water."

Tibbetts said he will use more than 100 amps of electricity to power the pumps that will push the 30,000 gallons of re-circulated water through the display.

"It will be pretty intense," he said.

Papyrus grown in Steve Tibbetts' greenhouse in Norwell rises out of a pond fed by a waterfall he designed. Tibbetts has a much larger waterfall planned for this year's New England Flower Show at the Bayside Expo Center.

Tibbetts will need most of this week to set up his exhibit at the Bayside Expo Center for the start of the show, which begins Saturday and runs through March 24.

"The exhibit is as high as it is wide," Tibbetts said. "It'll take the whole week to set it up and about 100-man hours."

Veronica "Roni" Lahage, who works with Tibbetts said the floral display for the exhibit will be done entirely with tropical and aquatic plants to create the image of a rainforest. Lahage said tropical fish, which are common in the water gardens Tibbetts creates for South Shore homeowners, will not be part of the display.

"There will be no fish, they're too hard to get acclimated to the temperature change," Lahage said.

Some of the aquatic plants that will be used in the display include papyrus, umbrella palm, water hyacinth, and various iris plants. Tropical plants include elephant ear, African blue lily, begonias, kangaroo vie, Hawaiian Ti, hibiscus, Brazilian egg plant and Croton, just to name a few.

Tibbetts said he will be getting help with the plants from his friends at the Boston Parks Department.

Campbell said visitors will enjoy the tropical nature of Tibbetts' work.

"His display this year is quite tropical," Campbell said. "Living in New England, tropical plants get the mind racing and the heart pumping."

Tibbetts is not new to floral shows. Three years ago, he won the People's Choice Award and the professional Exhibitor's Award at the Rhode Island Flower Show and looks forward to participating in this year's Boston show, not only for the work he will undoubtedly generate from the exhibit, but also for personal and creative satisfaction.

"I'm an artist," Tibbetts said. "You want to show what you're capable of doing. It's kind of a good ego thing.

"I'm almost worried about the amount of work I might get out of this," he said. "Business has been great just through word of mouth."

This year's show, with the theme "Shades of Spring" will run from March 16-24 at the Bayside Expo Center. Times are Monday-Saturday, 10 a.m. to 9:30 p.m. and Sundays 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Tickets are $16 weekday; $18 weekend; $7 for children 4-12; children under 4 free. Advance tickets are available online at www.masshort.com and www.ticketweb.com. The New England Spring Flower Show, the oldest in the country, attracts more than 150,000 visitors a year. With almost six acres of exhibits, featuring more than 40 fully landscaped gardens, has become the largest indoor event in New England and the third largest of its kind in the world.

Songs from her past

Milton mom makes musical debut with three-song CD

By Alice Coyle
ACOYLE@CNC.COM

Patricia Finigan Bulman could picture her family sitting in front of her as she directed her lilting Irish song toward the recording studio's microphone.

"I closed my eyes and I could see my whole family all those years ago," said Bulman recalling the experience of recording her first CD at Rik Tinory Productions last year.

"By shutting my eyes I was able to recreate the sweetness and simplicity of those days past," she said.

And envisioning her large Irish American family in front of her made it easier for Bulman, now 50, to perform the songs, near and dear to her heart.

"It's in my heart, so it came out easily," Bulman said of the three-track album featuring her rendition of Irish favorites "Danny Boy," "Galway Bay" and "An Irish Lullaby."

While the Irish music flowed easily, it was not what Bulman had gone into the studio intending to record.

"The Irish music was a fluke," said Bulman, who planned on singing some of her favorite jazz and easy listening tunes. But when Tinory heard Bulman's "Danny Boy," he encouraged her to record it at once along with some other Irish ditties. "Danny Boy" is not a song women sing usually, noted Bulman, but Tinory was so insistent she couldn't refuse.

She's especially proud of her performance of Irish Lullaby which is accompanied by only a music box playing softly in the background.

"I always had an idea of how I wanted to perform it," said Bulman. "Over the years I've sung thousands of lullabies to my children. This (version) is soft, drifting and fading the way you would sing a lullaby."

The CD jacket on her three-track album features singer Patricia Finigan Bulman on familiar ground near Milton Lower Falls. Re-released in time for St. Patrick's Day, Bulman's CD is available at the South Shore Hospital Cottage Shop and all area Irish Cottage Shops.

First released on a limited basis, with no jacket cover, Bulman's CD has been repackaged and released again, just in time for St. Patick's Day. The CD retails for $5.98 and is available at a number of local gift stores and all area Irish Cottage Shops.

While the record is a first for Bulman, singing is not new to the longtime Milton resident. Performing in front of her family was a regular thing for Bulman when she was a young girl. As a grown woman, her voice has filled St. Agatha's church on Sundays where she has sung solo and with the choir, and at countless weddings and funerals over the years.

Music has been her passion for years, but it was not a passion that she had the time or inclination to pursue professionally. Bulman's husband Mark's career as an orthopedic surgeon at South Shore Hospital came first. Bulman works running her husband's Weymouth office and has been a particularly active mother raising their three children — Andrew, 21, Timothy, 19 and Julie, 15.

But after so many years of helping with his career, Bulman said her husband decided it was time to give her a crack at singing professionally. A physician friend of Mark's got them in touch with Tinory, who has recorded big name performers like James Taylor and Aerosmith at his Cohasset studio.

The first recording was done in February 2001 and the Bulman's brought the early release along with them on a trip to Ireland where the inn keeper at the hotel they were staying in played the music for diners in the restaurant. "It was such a thrill to hear it being played," Bulman recalled.

Now, thanks to the new release, Irish music fans on this side of the "pond" can tune into Bulman's music. And if the three-song CD leaves fans wanting to hear more, Bulman said more is on the way. She's planning to do a full-length CD with more Irish songs and a complete backup band, in the near future.

"We'll see how this CD does and work over the spring for a fall release," Bulman said.

Then, she says she'll get back to her original plan of recording favorite songs she grew up listening to, including old standards like "Smile" "What'll I do," "Always," and "Someone to Watch Over Me."

"I'm not just an Irish-American singer," said Bulman.

"I was brought up to be that, but I hope to sing the other songs that I enjoy.

The resurgence in the popular music made famous by singers like Nat King Cole, Johnny Mercer, Frank Sinatra, Patsy Cline, and perhaps one day Bulman herself, is what she refers to as "my generation finally calming down."

Patricia Finigan Bulman's self-titled, three-track CD can be purchased at the Milton Gift Garden, O'Shae's Irish Shop, the Cottage Shop at South Shore Hospital and all area Irish Cottage Shops.

Potato Frittata simplified

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

A frittata is nothing more than a big, filled omelet. The omelet is not folded – it is cooked flat, the eggs and ingredients melded together, and then it is usually served in wedges. So what's the problem? Well, the eggs are usually tough and dry, the potatoes are soggy and take a long time to cook, and many recipes suggest slipping the frittata in and out of the pan, a process that is prone to disaster. I wanted a quick and easy potato frittata with crisp potatoes, just-cooked eggs, and plenty of flavor.

I started testing with five different recipes from the likes of Carol Field, Penelope Casas, and Marcella Hazan and decided that the cooking method for the potatoes was key. Instead of using slices, I started with one and a half cups of small dice and then fried them in a 9-inch non-stick skillet. This took just 10 minutes and only 1 cup of peanut oil. (Other oils either added no flavor or produced less than crispy potatoes.) As for the potatoes, I preferred Yukon Gold or Russets, both of which have good flavor and a nice light texture.

For the eggs, six was the right amount but I did not like the addition of milk of cream. (Separating one or two of the eggs and beating the whites made a fluffier, but not better, frittata.) Once the potatoes were cooked, removed from the pan along with the oil, I found that a tablespoon of butter to cook the eggs added flavor and also tenderness. The lightly whisked eggs are combined with the cooked potatoes and returned to the pan. Now the question was, what was the best method for cooking the eggs?

The problem with a frittata is that the bottom cooks before the top is ready, leading to overcooked eggs. Part of the solution is to pull in the edges of the frittata, tilting the pan so some of the uncooked egg on top runs down onto the hot pan. (This is the same method used to cook a French omelet.) However, this still leaves one with eggs that are undercooked on the top. Many cooks use a broiler to finish this dish (a good solution if you have a good broiler), flip the dish onto a dinner plate and then slide it back into the pan (tricky, at best), or simply place the skillet in a hot oven to finish. This last method is easiest and least prone to error. (Four minutes in a 450-degree oven did the trick.)

Other additions include chopped chives or parsley, sautéed onion, and roasted asparagus. One can also add grated Parmesan cheese, a great addition with the asparagus frittata. Note that salt and pepper are key ingredients and ought not to be reduced or overlooked.

QUICK AND CRISPY POTATO FRITTATA

If one uses a smaller dice, say 1/4-inch, the potatoes will cook in a just a few minutes.

1 cup peanut oil
1 1/2 cups Yukon Gold or Russet potatoes washed and cut into 1/4-inch dice about 2 medium
6 large eggs
3/4 teaspoon salt
Freshly ground black pepper
2 tablespoons finely chopped chives or flat leaf Italian Parsley
1 tablespoon unsalted butter

1. Preheat the oven to 450 degrees and adjust a rack to the center position. Heat the peanut oil in a heavy-duty 9-inch non-stick skillet over medium-high heat. When hot (375 degrees) add the potatoes and cook, stirring occasionally, until they are dark golden brown, a few minutes. Drain the potatoes in a mesh colander and then dump onto paper towels. Sprinkle with 1/4 teaspoon salt. Wipe out the skillet. Lower the heat to medium.

2. Meanwhile whisk the eggs in a medium bowl until foamy, about 2 minutes. Add 1/2 teaspoon of the salt, pepper, and chives or parsley and stir to combine. Place the butter in the skillet. Once it has stopped foaming add the potatoes and then the egg mixture. Stir gently. As the eggs begin to set, push and lift the edges of the frittata to allow the loose egg to run underneath, tilting the skillet if necessary. Continue until the frittata is no longer runny but the surface is still wet, about 2 minutes.

3. Place the skillet in the hot oven and cook until the surface is dry and set, but not browned, about 3 to 4 minutes. Slide onto a plate and serve. Serves six as a side dish.

Onion Variation

Before browning the potatoes, sauté one cup of diced onion in one tablespoon peanut oil for 3 to 4 minutes over medium heat until soft and just starting to brown. Remove from skillet, set aside and add to the egg mixture when adding the chives.

Asparagus Variation

Preheat oven to 500 degrees. Omit the potatoes, and chives or parsley in the above recipe. Snap or trim the stalks of one pound asparagus. Place on a baking sheet and coat very lightly with olive oil. Place in oven and roast until barely limp and bright green, 5 to 8 minutes depending on the thickness of the asparagus. Remove from the oven and lower the temperature to 450 degrees. Proceed with the recipe at step two. Reduce the amount of salt to 1/2 teaspoon and add 1/4-cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese to the egg mixture. Add the asparagus to the skillet in place of the potatoes.

The many types of monotype

Duxbury Art Association exhibit showing through April 19

By Matt Whorf

Some of the varied work on display at the Duxbury's Ellison Center for the

The Monotype Guild of New England was founded in 1985 by a group of artists in workshops specializing in the medium at the Fuller Museum in Brockton and the Cape Cod Conservatory in Barnstable. The formation was a result of a quiet trend in the art world of the time, for artists to venture or expand into more experimental, multi-faceted media. This is a partial definition of the monotype and related monoprint forms.

After 17 years, the guild has expanded to some 175 members in all six New England states and ranging from students to professionals. The guild has also sponsored more than fifty open, juried and curated exhibitions for its members, more recently beginning its series of annual juried exhibits strictly for its own membership. The fifth such show exhibiting MGNE works is currently on display at the Duxbury Art Association, at the Ellison Center for the Arts, through April 19.

"We believe this exhibit really show cases the range of the monotype form," said Monotype Guild vice president and 5th Annual Juried Show participant Beverly Carriero. "Each print is unique and each artist brings their own individual approach to the work, including watercolors and oils and from representational images to abstract. Some artists used oil — or water-based inks, some pieces have more painterly images while others used collage added to the plates and others took a more spontaneous abstract approach. It's a very diverse group of works all together."

Carriero's exhibit work, an interpretive portrait titled "Mother's Day," emerged as one of three award winners chosen by the Art Association's guest juror among a total of 37 pieces in the exhibit. The other two include a lush, intricate and nature-themed snow-covered trees study (Anita Hunt's "Glimmer") and a luminous abstracted still life (Linda Bachelor's "Floribunda").

But the overall quality of individual style and vision is consistent throughout the show, featuring artists from Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Vermont and Connecticut. The exhibit is also typically not limited to the monotype form, extending as well to the medium's monoprint cousin. While both are forms of printmaking where an original image is transferred from a plate onto receiving material (paper, cloth, etc.) by means of pressure, the distinction is monotypes are made strictly from perfectly smooth plates, while monoprints are made from plates containing a matrix (etching, silkscreen, collagraph, etc.).

As Carriero pointed out, the two forms lend themselves to an extensive variety of techniques, materials and registrations (ink, paint, applications of print pressure), not to mention subject matter.

Most impressive among the representational works are such ocean side scenes as Mary Jane Gorton's "Sea Song" and Richard Harrington's "Before the Storm" and landscape pieces like two in a series of ice-capped tundra scenes from "Iceland" by Joan W. Hausrath and the odd-imaged study of "Hanging Rock: Middletown, RI Spring Green" by Elizabeth Goddard. A wide selection of abstract pieces displaying an ambiguous, subjective array of images are consistent in the artists' overall aim of spontaneity.

"There are any number of variables in the monotype and monoprint process, so many that it can almost be magical," Carreiro said. "The artist is never fully in control because there is always that element of surprise when the pressing material is lifted and the plate is pulled up. It's almost like Christmas."

Carriero will instruct a workshop, Non-Toxic Printmaking: Pronto Plates, at the Duxbury Art Association wing at the Ellison Center on May 18 and 19, 10 a.m.-4 p.m., following the closing of the Juried Exhibition. For registration or other workshop information, call the Art Association at 781 934-2731 ext. 4.

When to prune specific varieties of woody plants

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Early March is the ideal time to begin the process of selective pruning to produce balance, symmetry, direct growth or rejuvenate old, sparse or overgrown shrubs. Regular pruning will improve the overall appearance of nearly all woody plants since few grow with perfect shapes and even when selected appropriately for their allotted space, most benefit from an occasional trim to look their best.

There is an old adage that suggests that one should prune whenever the pruning shears is sharp. Although light pruning in any season is unlikely to cause permanent harm to an established tree or shrub, the timing and magnitude of the pruning process will greatly influence the growth and flowering of most plants. The best advice is to prune spring and early summer bloomers immediately after they flower while those plants that bloom in summer and fall should be pruned in spring before growth begins.

The flower buds of early season blooming delights are set the previous year on what is termed "old wood". Severe pruning at this time of year, just before growth begins for the season, will dramatically reduce their flowering, but sometimes I am willing to sacrifice those fleeting blossoms to rejuvenate an overgrown tree or shrub. It is considerably easier to view their architecture and observe damaged, diseased, or crossed branches while the plants are still dormant and despite the massive spring cleaning effort that awaits, I have more time in late winter than in the spring and early summer. Many of my flowering trees and shrubs reside in my perennial borders. Pruning in March enables easy access to these woody plants, reduces the potential damage of falling branches, and allows for a quick cleanup.

I adore the reliable glorious blooms of crabapple trees but their vigorous growth provides a constant challenge. Annual pruning of established trees is essential to eliminate crossed branches and sucker growth and to thin out interior branches. Suckers that arise from the tops of branches or from the ground around the base of the tree should be removed at the base. As new sprouts appear during the growing season, a quick jerk of the emerging twigs will often remove these unwanted growths and reduce their reappearing from the same point. Shadbush (Amelanchier spp.), cherries (Prunus spp.), and autumn olive (Eleagnus) benefit from similar annual prunings and will still provide plentiful blooms and fruits each season.

Plants that are prone to heavy sap production, including birches, maples or grapes, bleed profusely if pruned in spring as the leaf buds are swelling. Although the running sap will not actually harm the tree or vine, this bleeding can be most disconcerting. Late winter pruning, while the plant is still fully dormant, or spring pruning after new growth begins, will minimize this condition.

Minimal pruning should be performed on new trees unless they exhibit damaged, crossed or dead branches or require shaping or thinning to produce an attractive specimen. Branches should be well spaced to avoid future crowding and those that grow from the trunk at wide angles should be selected over branches growing upright at narrow angles. Prune and train members of the Magnolia family while they are small, during dormancy or immediately after flowering, for these handsome multi-stemmed trees and shrubs heal poorly when large branches are removed.

Perhaps the one shrub that generates the greatest number of inquiries about pruning and flower production is the blue hydrangea, Hydrangea macrophylla. Although this deciduous shrub produces its spectacular blossoms later in the season, its flower buds are formed on old wood at or near the end of the branches. Substantial fall or spring pruning of the stems will eliminate the flowers. These shrubs require protected locations to avoid desiccation of these buds during the winter months which is often the primary cause for sporadic bloom. Moisture retentive soils are also critical for bud formation. Our mild winter may signal a banner season for hydrangea blooms but drought conditions may counteract the warm temperatures. Thin out stems of older shrubs to allow light and air to reach the interior of the plant and remove dead tips or branches as the plant begins to develop its leaves.

Trees and shrubs that flower in late June or after tend to bloom on "new wood". Late winter pruning will not reduce flowering and should stimulate vigorous new growth and greater flower production. Popular summer bloomers that will benefit from pruning this month include butterfly bushes (Buddleia spp.), sweet pepperbush (Clethra), Rose of Sharon (Hibiscus syriacus), beautyberry (Callicarpa), blue-mist shrub (Caryopteris) and Peegee Hydrangea.

Butterfly bushes, in particular, can grow to be sizeable shrubs that may become overly dense, leggy and unattractive if allowed to grow unrestrained. Given our mild winter conditions this year, there has been little or no dieback this season. Cut back these vigorous shrubs to 12 to 18 inches tall or even to the ground this month. This ruthless pruning will promote glorious quantities of fragrant blooms later in the summer.

Some of these ornamental shrubs, especially those grown for their foliage or their colorful twigs, will produce better color and larger leaves on new growth. Red- and yellow-twigged dogwoods and purple smokebush should be drastically pruned as their leaf buds swell and may even be cut down to the ground to promote vigorous new brightly colored stems or leaves. Another candidate for this type of severe spring pruning is Hydrangea 'Annabelle', commonly called the snowball hydrangea, which, when pruned to the ground, produces spectacular, massive, white spherical trusses beginning in July.

My best recommendation is to acquire a good reference book on pruning or attend a pruning demonstration by our local county extension service to learn proper pruning techniques. I often refer to "The Pruning Book" by Lee Reich, to refresh my memory on when and how to prune but practice and experience tend to be the best means of becoming a skilled pruner.

Educational Opportunity: With a drought advisory in effect for the entire state of Massachusetts, water conservation and water-saving gardening are crucial issues this season. Sally Muspratt will present a lecture on garden designs and planting alternatives to water-guzzling lawns at the Hingham Library on March 20, 2002 at 7 p.m.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 13

This day has its challenges. The dark side of the new moon is in force and effect until 9:02 p.m. In addition, a lunar alignment to Pluto affects the morning. Its influence may spark emotional thunderstorms and bring up old wounds, resentments. Be more sensitive, nurturing toward others. Make up a list of things to do and stay busy. Follow through on projects that need a finishing touch; handle routine errands and chores. The new moon culminates at 23-degrees of Pisces, and the moon becomes inactive at 9:02 p.m. Get extra rest tonight.

THURSDAY, MARCH 14

It may take a while for the morning fog to burn off. The inactive Pisces moon travels at the tail end of the zodiac until 10:34 a.m. At this time influences turn around completely, because the moon enters energetic Aries. You can be most productive today, if you are well organized. This is one of the best days of the month for launching important enterprises, signing contracts, making purchases. On the other hand, a lunar contact to Jupiter and an applying Mars/Neptune alignment warn you to know your limits. Don't act on impulse or go to extremes.

FRIDAY, MARCH 15

Yesterday's planetary influences continue to affect today. Be sure to have a clear plan of action and stick to it. You can get a lot accomplished. The green light for new starts remains on. Venus forms a harmonious contact to Saturn in the morning, Mercury to Jupiter in the afternoon. The pitfall in the day is a 90-degree alignment of Mars and Neptune. Use common sense and don't take risks. It may be difficult to separate the facts from the wishful thinking. Venus and Neptune interact this evening making it prime for social activities, romantic rendezvous.

SATURDAY, MARCH 16

An Aries moon continues to set a fast pace today. Tackle jobs that require physical exertion and stamina. Get back on track with exercise programs or enjoy favorite sports. You can initiate new projects until 4:07 p.m., when the moon aligns with Uranus and becomes inactive. At 11:01 p.m. a mellow Taurus moon takes over.

SUNDAY, MARCH 17

A 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Saturn takes the spotlight today. Your mental attitude will make the difference. Focus on the positives instead of getting caught up in the limitations of a situation. On the other hand, this is a favorable time for developing work projects that need mental focus and precision, attention to details. Lunar alignments to Neptune and Mars this evening caution you to maintain a balance. Don't get carried away and overdo or overindulge.

MONDAY, MARCH 18

This day holds high potential for productivity. A stable, practical Taurus moon offers an opportunity to get things done in this stormy astrological period. Roll up your sleeves and take on a full work agenda. This is a great evening to kick back, relax and unwind.

TUESDAY, MARCH 19

At 7:53 a.m. the Taurus moon aligns with the sun and becomes inactive. A lively Gemini moon takes over at 10:20 a.m. In addition, an alignment of Mercury to Mars generates high energy. Make up a list of things to do and stick to it. Instead of focusing on one project, tackle a variety of jobs and errands; tie up loose ends. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action for a few days. Enjoy favorite sports, physical or social activities this evening.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 20

Pluto and the sun share the spotlight today. The planet Pluto, standing at 18-degrees of Sagittarius, begins retrograde travel at 9:53 a.m. The Vernal Equinox arrives at 2:16 p.m., when the sun enters the sign Aries. This is a time for new beginnings, new resolutions. Eliminate the negativity in your life. Free yourself from past traumas, hurts. Forgive others and leave the past behind. The Gemini moon forms major alignments to five planets; the most difficult occurs this evening, when the moon opposes Pluto.

Graham Waste plans move

ZBA seeks legal opinion on bylaw

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The MBTA is taking the old Winter Garden Skating rink — now Graham Waste Services at 110 CJC Highway (Rte. 3A) — by eminent domain to make room for the Cohasset MBTA Greenbush train station.

So Paul Barry is looking to move the business across the street to land off Crocker Lane that he also owns.

Sounds simple enough.

To that end Barry's engineer, architect, and his son-in-law Robert Schwandt, an attorney, presented plans to the Zoning Board on Monday to make the case for a special permit to build part of the proposed warehouse in the water resource district.

But hold on a minute.

Enter John McNabb, who is now chairman of the Water Commission, but when wearing another hat is also was the ultimate thorn in the side of Barry and the former Cohasset Heights Landfill also off Rte. 3A. McNabb's dogged determination and thousands of hours of volunteer time examining environmental issues under the auspices of the anti-landfill expansion group dubbed SAFE, tried to stymie landfill plans at every turn.

He's back.

McNabb contends Graham Waste's plan constitutes a solid-waste related use; something — thanks largely to his efforts at Town Meeting — is prohibited in the water resource district.

CHS Drama club goes for the gold

Qualified for state finals

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The field has been narrowed down. The tournament began in early March with the preliminary rounds followed by the quarter finals a week later. This Friday, the sweet 15 will take the stage. This is a different kind of March Madness.

Cohasset High School's Drama Workshop, recognized as an extra-curricular activity by the school, is preparing for the Massachusetts High School Drama Guild Festival this Friday. The club has already advanced from the preliminary rounds, when more than 100 schools were competing for the honor, to make the final group of just 15.

"I'm so thrilled we've made it this far," said Jenna Emmons, director of the play. "Nobody really gave us a chance."

The club making it to the finals has taken on David versus Goliath proportions. Comprised of only eight members (including Emmons), the drama workshop is competing against schools that send more than 50 members to represent them.

"I'm so thrilled we've made it this far. Nobody really gave us a chance."
— Jenna Emmons, director

"I think working with a small group of kids can work to our advantage," Emmons said. "We feel like we're the little guys and it has really galvanized us."

"It's acting at its best," Ingber said. "We're not all glitz and glamour."

The play the workshop is producing is a comedy titled, "Act Three, Scene Five" written by Terry Ortwein. The play is about high school students trying to put together a production of "Romeo and Juliet".

"I've always had a problem with most high school theatre because it's not very accessible to high school students," Emmons said. "This play allows the students to play themselves in a sense."

Competition keeps prices in check

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

In an affluent town such as Cohasset, many expect the cost of living to be much higher than in other areas. And who can blame them? After all, houses are more expensive, taxes are continually rising, and a sandwich at a local restaurant could set one back almost $10.

But what about the supermarkets? It makes sense that in wealthier communities' prices would soar at grocery stores. But is that really the case?

The Mariner surveyed six supermarkets, three Shaw's and three Stop & Shops, last week, including those in Cohasset. The other four stores were Stop & Shop supermarkets in Hingham and Weymouth, and Shaw's in Allston and Weymouth.

Nine items were picked at random to try and determine if Cohasset residents are paying more for their groceries. From pasta sauce and tuna to Kleenex and coffee, the Mariner tried to vary the type of items it surveyed to get a true feel for the prices at a particular store. However, as one can see from the chart, demographics play little role in determining the prices at a grocery store.

"We price by zones based on the competitive nature of the market," said Megan Pratt, spokeswoman for Stop & Shop. "It has nothing to do with how affluent a community is."

Bernie Rogan, spokesman for Shaw's, concurred and said that competition is what drives the industry. He said the pricing for food items is determined four weeks in advance. When a customer receives a flier advertising the various rates of food, the flier is reflecting the previous four weeks of pricing. Rogan said the supermarkets do this so as not to tip its hand to its competitors.

"When we see a competitors' flier we try to beat their prices," Rogan said. "After we lower ours, they presumably do the same and the race is on."

Bacterial disease claims life of a fun-loving teen

Fact sheets delivered to school community

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

School, health and town officials had the difficult task this week of alerting classmates and friends that a 16-year-old Cohasset High student had succumbed to a communicable bacterial disease that can lead to meningitis all the while trying to stave off panic.

But not lost in the warnings and precautions delivered by hand to all high school families in town – was the memory of the spirited young man who lost his life to the infection and a heartfelt concern for his family.

Jesse Sargent who had valiantly fought two battles with Hodgkin's Disease, a form of cancer, passed away Friday from bacterial meningococcal disease, an infectious illness that can cause meningitis, which is infection of the tissue that covers the brain and spinal cord, or sepsis, a blood infection.

"Jesse liked to laugh," his mother Cheryl Sargent said. "He was a great kid. Humor was his number one goal in life."

Sargent said Jesse wasn't feeling well at school Thursday so he called her at work.

"He said, 'come and get me Mom,'" she said. Jesse went to his family doctor and was sent to the emergency room at South Shore Hospital for evaluation and South Shore sent him to the New England Medical Center where his condition deteriorated overnight. The fun-loving teenager, who loved watching sports, passed away Friday morning.

After learning of the cause of Jesse's death, selectmen called an emergency meeting Saturday with the Board of Health, school department, and fire and police officials. A notice along with a public health fact sheet on symptoms, preventative measures and general instructions for parents to follow was hand delivered to all high school families that afternoon and mailed to all families with students in the elementary schools. Churches were also asked to make announcements on Sunday.

Cohasset Middle High School Principal Michael Jones was designated as the contact person for questions.

Jones said Jesse may have been more susceptible to the infection because his immune system may have been compromised due his battle with cancer. Jones cautioned that the disease is not highly contagious and is spread essentially through saliva either through sharing food, utensils and drinks, or by kissing.

Jones said school counselors were available to the students, who were informed in small groups on Friday. He said students were making blue ribbons in memory of Jesse whose sister Samantha, 14, also attends the middle-high school.

"We very distressed and very saddened and very supportive of the family," he said. "Jesse was a good, likable kid – people were very fond of him."

Jones said providing information to families apparently worked as attendance Monday was normal.

Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said the health department is following up with about 40 family members and others who had close contact with Jesse in the weeks before his death. Those who did, were advised to see their physician and get a prescription for prophylaxis (preventative) antibiotic, such as Cipro that became a household word during the Antrax scare. The family had a birthday party Sunday with dips and other food and cans of soda., he said. A town nurse spent a few hours

Selectmen may sink Hagerty proposal

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

An anticipated upbeat meeting between Jack Buckley and the board of selectmen turned decidedly negative Tuesday night.

Buckley, leader for a group advocating the establishment of an environmental education and research facility center at the Hagerty House, presented his case to the board. After his presentation, selectmen were left scratching their heads.

"I'm very disappointed with the lack of focus in your project," said selectman Tom Callahan. "I don't have a clear sense of what your intentions are at all with this building."

Although the consensus on the board was that Buckley was unprepared for the meeting, they asked him to return in September to update them once more. They also asked that he update them via letter or email every few weeks so they can track his progress.

"All I'm saying is that there is a group of people interested in taking over the building for educational experiences," Buckley said. "It was not made clear that I needed to have a sound financial plan ready."

> "I'm very disappointed with the lack of focus in your project."
> — Selectman Tom Callahan

Buckley, a teacher at the high school, came in late last year to discuss his proposal for the Coastal Maritime Institute's interest in the building. At the time, selectmen warmed to the idea and asked him to come back in a few months to discuss his progress. But Tuesday, the relationship had cooled.

Selectmen collectively voiced their concerns over how this project was going to be funded. Buckley said he has submitted a variety of grants, ranging from $5,000 to $20,000, but hasn't heard a decision on any of them.

"This project sounds very piecemeal to me," said selectman Michael Sullivan. "I don't get a sense that you have a cohesive plan but are looking for the town to fund this. That's not going to happen."

Buckley defended himself saying that the group he represents has been dealing with the issue for only five months, which is not a lot of time.

"We've accomplished a lot in five months," he said. "We will soon know if we have been successful in our grant applications and if so, we will be in a fairly good position to carry our initiative forward."

Buckley added he has been in contact with the South Shore Art Center which could be interested in using the second and third floors of the building for studio space. He also said APTO Solutions, a company run out of Atlanta, has agreed to donate furniture and 12 computers to the organization.

Selectman Merle Brown said he would like to see the project succeed but it obviously needed more work. He said Buckley can't look at the town for any funds.

Buckley said his next step is to assess the official level of commitment from school administrators and other town boards. He said that he wants to determine if his group is working in a direction supported by educational and municipal leaders.

"If we are, then we'll continue to work on soliciting funding and further community support," he said.

While selectmen thought this was a good idea, they felt Buckley should have already met with various boards to determine their interest.

"There is a whole lot of work left to be done," Callahan said.

Selectmen granted St. Anthony's Church a one-day liquor license on March 23 in order to have a belated celebration for St. Patrick's Day.

Historical Commission

Jackie Clark, member of the Historical Commission, informed selectmen that she will be resigning from the commission. The vacancy needs to be filled with a licensed real estate agent and anyone interested in the position should contact Town Manager Mark Haddad.

Personnel requests

Police Chief Bob Jackson met with selectmen Tuesday to discuss personnel changes he is requesting for the department.

Jackson said he wanted an extra patrolman to fill because he would like to promote one of the current patrolmen to sergeant.

Eventually, the goal of adding the personnel would be to have four sergeants on the force and one lieutenant.

"The long term goal is to establish a chain of command," Jackson said. "It's important that if I'm not around to have someone to take over."

Currently, the town has four sergeants and a chief, leaving a gap in the chain of command.

If the changes were to take place the budgetary impact would be approximately $9,000 during Fiscal Year 2003 but Jackson said some funds from the new 32-hour dispatch position could be diverted to pay for these changes.

Burning season is underway

Cohasset residents may obtain permits on a daily basis through May 1 for open burning. Permits may be obtained by calling the Fire Department Dispatch Center at 781-383-0260 from 9 am.-2 p.m. Permits are valid for one day only.

Burning may be conducted during periods of good atmospheric ventilation and must not cause a nuisance, the fire department says. Adverse weather conditions (wind and drought) will impact the issuing of permits. Burning hours are 10 a.m.-4 p.m. on days permits are issued. Decisions to issue permits are made daily at 9 a.m. Persons calling for permits before that hour will be advised to call back.

Open burning permits are issued for the disposal of brush, cane, driftwood and forest debris. Burning shall be conducted on land nearest to the place were the debris came from. Burning must be conducted at least 75 feet away from any dwelling. Select a safe area with no ground cover.

While burning, the fire must be attended at all times until completely extinguished. Have a water hose, rake and shovel nearby for fire control.

Bird walk

A bird walk led by Sally Avery from the Audubon Society will take place on Saturday, April 6, from 8 to 10 a.m. on Atlantic Avenue in Hull, (at the foot of Summit Avenue). Everyone is welcome. This event is free.

Straits Pond Watershed Association's mission is to provide community input to governmental committees and agencies about Straits Pond and to facilitate efforts to maintain and improve the environmental quality and beauty of Straits Pond.

Housing issues

Liz Harrington, town planner and Joseph Nedrow, chairman of Cohasset housing committee will be discussing the issues of accessory dwellings and senior housing. If people have housing questions, this will be the opportunity to have them answered. The meeting will be held on March 21, at 12:30 p.m. at South Shore Community Center, 3 North Main Street, Cohasset.

Aviation Impacts & Cohasset's Future

Cohasset selectmen have asked town aviation activists, "Why don't you simply negotiate to move the jets over the ocean, rather than pressing a suit against Massport?" It is a fair question. They have also asked, "Why have you again requested an appropriation of money to continue the existing lawsuit, given the fact that town meeting has rejected a previous request for continued funding." That, too, is a fair question.

We do seek a settlement with Massport. If achieved, such a settlement has the potential not only to avert future harm, but also to enormously improve present practice in Cohasset. Our aims are to move all low-altitude jet arrivals out over the ocean, eliminating the noise of jet arrivals, and to double the altitude at which jet departures cross Cohasset, reducing departure noise to approximately one fourth of what it now is. These aims would be worth pursuing even if the threat of future environmental catastrophe were not also hanging in the balance.

We persist because we hope to create broad public understanding about a situation so unusual that we have found that we must use repetition and add detail to explain it adequately. We believe the future of Cohasset depends on building awareness that we confront a future so drastically changed that present experience provides no context for its consideration. We want Cohasset residents to make their decisions with a complete understanding that Massport's plan for Cohasset will not be experienced as a matter of incremental growth and barely perceptible differences, but rather as a comprehensive and shocking transformation.

PRINCIPAL AVIATION GATEWAY

The Federal Aviation Administration and Massport plan to make Cohasset New England's principal aviation gateway. This means much more than simply accommodating growth at Logan Airport, or routing a few smaller airplanes to a new runway.

Previously, the main route into Logan has been over Milton, Dorchester, and South Boston. With new traffic patterns catalyzed by a proposed new runway, arrival traffic over Cohasset would greatly surpass what the Milton routing now experiences, and fully equal the numbers Massport has planned for that route after airport expansion. In addition, Cohasset would see an upsurge in jet departure operations, which Milton mostly escapes. Taken together, Cohasset's total low-altitude jet operations would exceed those experienced by any town in the Boston area which does not actually border the airport. With the new traffic patterns, Massport and the FAA would abandon the present strategy of dispersing impacts, and replace it with a strategy of concentrating impacts over Cohasset and other South Shore towns, for the explicit purpose of reducing impacts elsewhere.

DISPROPORTIONATE TRAFFIC

Thus, while Massport figures show jet traffic at Logan might be expected to grow during the next 15 years by approximately 74%, a disproportionate amount of that growth is slated to take place over Cohasset and other South Shore towns. Cohasset, which already has a disproportionate share of jet traffic, will see its total rise about 102% overall, distributed as an approximately 30% increase in departure traffic, and a remarkable 277% increase in low altitude arrivals. Most of the arrival impacts would be felt very quickly after construction of the new runway, as Massport and the FAA shifted already-existing arrival operations from runways elsewhere to fly over Cohasset instead.

LOWER ALTITUDES

Arrival traffic over Cohasset during bad weather and in poor visibility conditions will increase. During bad weather, it is common practice for air traffic controllers to reduce the altitudes of arriving aircraft earlier in the approach pattern than they do under better conditions. This practice has been followed historically over Milton and Dorchester, and would presumably be initiated over Cohasset. The result could be heavy jets flying over Cohasset at altitudes similar to those now routinely seen on the South Shore only at Hull High School, at the northern end of the Hull peninsula—altitudes of 1,800 feet or below. This could put some Cohasset residents closer to these airplanes than Logan's control tower is to any runway at the airport. In western and northern Cohasset the combination of increased traffic and lower altitudes could result in noise levels so high that they would reach the threshold defined by the FAA as incompatible with residential land use.

POLLUTING AIR EMISSIONS

Air emissions are yet another part of the picture. Aircraft air emissions and their effects on health have not been well studied. Here is what we do know. If Massport's plans are implemented, airplanes flying at altitudes below 10,000 feet will burn more than 8,000 tons of aviation fuel per year within Cohasset's borders. Unlike automobile engines, aircraft engines have no emission controls whatever, and they work less efficiently and emit more pollutants when operating at low altitudes, as they will be over Cohasset.

Current calculations allow us to simplify the task of visualization which terms like "8,000 tons" leave incomplete. For instance, the quantity of aviation fuel burned annually in Cohasset would be 30–50 times greater than the quantity of fuel burned in Cohasset by the Old Colony commuter rail line; or, alternatively, the aviation fuel burn could be matched by filling a semi-trailer tank truck with kerosene, bringing it into town, and setting it alight...every day, year round. On New Year's Eve, roll in an extra 39 trailers and torch them off together, accounting for the fractional part of the computation which predicts a Cohasset jet fuel burn of about 7.76 tank trucks per week.

But isn't a burning tank truck dirtier than a jet engine? Air emissions generally correlate with the quantity of fuel burned, but the combustion method can make a difference. Jet engines operating at low altitudes produce and disperse a lot of soot, but maybe not as much as a burning tank truck. On the other hand, jet engines may create a much greater quantity of nitrogen oxides.

Cohasset residents should ask themselves if they know of any community anywhere which has long withstood an environmental assault like the one which Massport's plans would bring. Could any such community maintain itself as the kind of community which Cohasset now is?

WHY NOT NEGOTIATE?

Against that context comes the Selectmen's first question: why a lawsuit instead of a negotiation? The question pre-supposes a choice which does not exist in fact. Massport will not negotiate. The question of negotiation has been explored repeatedly and at length, to no avail. Not only have our own efforts proved unavailing, but also we know of no instance in the Boston area in which either Massport or the FAA has negotiated with any opponent of its policies in the absence of a lawsuit. Thus, the answer to the Selectmen's question is that we must sue Massport if we want to negotiate. Otherwise, Massport's managers will simply use the power they have to implement policies the airlines prefer, and ignore the harm to our town.

However, the question of negotiation vs. a lawsuit deserves a longer answer. The subject is a complicated one. We hope the following discussion will help the Selectmen and others understand why we urge Cohasset residents to continue support for the town's participation with other towns in a lawsuit against Massport.

Determination of where airplanes are routed is nominally in the hands of the Federal Aviation Administration. Although officially Massport has no final authority over routing decisions, in fact the FAA does listen to Massport, because Massport is the operator of an airport. Ordinarily, the FAA will not defer to ordinary citizens, or even listen to them. FAA officials fear entering onto a slippery slope of accommodation. They are keenly aware that if they showed the slightest inclination to listen, millions of people nationwide would swamp them with entreaties. So FAA officials make it a point to be ostentatious about not listening. Instead, FAA officials emphasize that the FAA considers environmental concerns only if they do not result in the slightest reduction of airport capacity, or the slightest impairment of "efficiency," which means airline costs. FAA personnel are invariably explicit about one central point: there will be no balancing of environmental concerns against aviation interests, ever.

For Massport's part, its executives have made it a policy never to appear in any forum where critics of Massport's policies and plans might question them before the public. Instead, they deal with the public almost exclusively through press releases, which are frequently at variance with the facts revealed in their legally required environmental documents.

Neither Massport nor the FAA behaves as if direct service to the public were part of its mandate. Both predicate all their actions and policies on the premise that they serve the public exclusively by serving the interests of the aviation industry.

OUR PROPOSAL TO THE FAA

An example of how this works occurred recently when Ralph Dormitzer, in collaboration with others from Cohasset, Hingham and Hull, submitted a thoroughly researched proposal to the FAA. The aim was to change the arrival pattern for aircraft approaching Logan's Runway 33L during clear weather, moving the airplanes over the ocean instead of over Cohasset, Hingham, and Hull. Using the input of aviation experts, including veteran pilots, we proposed an alternative approach that would be safe, efficient, and easy to fly. Our proposed change is shown in the bottom diagram.

At first, the FAA insisted it would not even study the proposal unless we could win support from Massport's Community Advisory Committee, a group with representatives from 27 cities and towns throughout the Boston area. With that accomplished, the FAA agreed briefly to take the proposal under advisement. Massport objected. Massport was granted a meeting by the FAA to discuss our proposal, a meeting to which we were not invited. As a result of the meeting the FAA decided to delay consideration of our proposal until it had acted on Massport's new runway application. We learned all this after the fact. In a letter, the Hull Selectmen urged that the proposed route change should be considered together with the new runway request, because only joint consideration could make it clear whether this proposal's enormous environmental benefits were being sacrificed to the new runway. The FAA never answered the Hull Selectmen's letter.

IS RESISTANCE FUTILE?

Although the aviation industry is incredibly well defended in its daily operations by purpose-built laws and regulations, there are two small openings through which democratic input may yet slip into the process, via the courts.

The first opening concerns airports. These are still under local control, and airport operators may still be sued for damages caused by the way they build and operate their facilities. Aviation industry lobbyists in Washington are furiously trying to close this small chink in aviation's armor, but so far they have not succeeded.

The second opening concerns the National Environmental Policy Act. Although it is substantively toothless, this act does require the aviation industry to provide forthright descriptions of the harm its projects will cause, including harm to the human environment. Massport has proved reluctant to be forthright. Apparently, nobody at Massport is willing to stand up and say, "We expect our expansion of Logan Airport to destroy the livability of large parts of Cohasset, and we expect residents there to accept that damage without compensation." As a result, Massport's legally required environmental documents are full of omissions, evasions, and deceptions, for which they can be sued. We can use a lawsuit to force this choice upon Massport's leaders: face the pain of forthrightness, or come to the negotiating table. They may choose to negotiate.

BALANCE UNCERTAINTY AGAINST RISK, BUT BUY INSURANCE

To skeptics we address a simple request, please weigh the costs to Cohasset, and to all of its residents individually, if events prove us right, against the relatively small amount of money which will be wasted in supporting a losing lawsuit if we are wrong. Even if the lawsuit's costs were to double or triple, as lawsuits have a way of doing, the money expended would be reinforced by matching expenditures from Hull and Hingham. And even if all that money were lost together, it would not amount to the hundredth part of the economic devastation which Massport's plans will inflict upon our town if we are right. We ask even the skeptics to join us in our belief that this lawsuit we advocate is the cheapest insurance we will ever have the opportunity to buy, and the only route by which we can pursue a negotiated settlement with Massport and the FAA.

Surely the chance of achieving these aims is worth the dollars it will cost to try.

Competition keeps prices in check

Rogan added a community can benefit from having two large supermarkets in the area. Without the competition a store could charge whatever it pleased.

"The ultimate benefactor is the customer, who sees reasonable prices," he said. "With one supermarket, the customer is really at the mercy of the store."

Cohasset shoppers interviewee did not feel that the cost of living in Cohasset had an effect on the prices of groceries.

Awilda Trapp, resident of Hull, said she comes to Cohasset to shop because of the convenience and the service provided at the stores.

"I don't find it's that much more expensive here," she said. "If anything, I think it may be cheaper."

Julie Messenger of Scituate felt that there are enough supermarkets on the South Shore to keep prices competitive. She said she shops at the Cohasset location because it's easy to get to.

"I guess I always thought there may be a small difference in price," she said. "I'm glad to learn that there isn't."

Graham Waste plans move

Graham Waste argues what is proposed is a warehouse, a use that would be allowed with a special permit.

The Zoning Board plans to make site visits to Graham Waste's existing facility and the proposed location before the continuation of the public hearing slated for next month.

What Graham Waste, a construction waste company that supplies roll-off containers for disposal of debris at work sites, is proposing is a 25,000 square foot warehouse and 7,000 square foot office. About 60 percent of the warehouse would lie inside the water resource district.

With few exceptions, the company's trucks and containers would be stored inside the warehouse. Most of the time, containers at the site would be empty because they are usually hauled directly from the construction site to a landfill or transfer station before returning to the company's facility.

Although some construction debris could be hazardous, Graham Waste would not handle hazardous waste per se. At the start of a project, a different contractor usually deals with hazardous material such as asbestos that is tightly sealed before it's taken away.

Also proposed is elaborate drainage infrastructure, including roof collection and a series of catch basins to collect water runoff and separate any oil and grit before the water is recharged into the soil.

Minor repairs to the vehicles that Graham owns would be conducted in the part of the warehouse that lies outside the water resource district. There would be a tight tank system to collect any oil or grease that might spill on the floor of the warehouse.

McNabb said any solid waste handling facility is not allowed in the water resource district.

Woody Chittick, ZBA chairman, said the board would consult with Town Counsel for an opinion on whether Graham Waste is akin to a disposal situation or a warehouse site where dumpsters, which are empty for the most part, are brought in.

McNabb pointed out construction and demolition debris can contain some hazardous material and empty dumpsters can contain residue.

Chittick said it is a matter of degree.

"I'm not worrying about a droplet of something violating the purpose of the district," he said. Chittick said he wasn't sure empty trucks outside in the rain, given the proposed drainage system, pass the threshold of endangering the water system.

John Cavanaro, Barry's engineer, said due to the grading of the site, it would be impossible to move the entire building outside the water resource district.

The hearing was continued until April 22.

Carl Sestito to lead DPW

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Town Manager Mark Haddad announced the appointment of Carl Sestito as Superintendent of the Department of Public Works at the selectmen's meeting Tuesday.

Sestito will succeed Harold Litchfield who has served the town since 1960.

Sestito, 42, has been working with the DPW for 20 years and knows the town well.

"I'm excited about the appointment," Sestito said. "I've been around for some town and I have a good idea how the town works."

Sestito, who is the father of two, graduated from Cohasset High School in 1978 and lives in town. He has been Litchfield's right hand man for the past several years.

Haddad said he is thrilled about the appointment.

"I'm glad I didn't have to go a big search to find Harold's (Litchfield) replacement," he said. "We had the best candidate in house."

"I've been around for some town and I have a good idea how the town works."
— Carl Sestito

Haddad said that Sestito has been a hard worker for his entire career in town and has earned his respect and admiration. He said with appointing an in-house candidate, it should be a smooth transition for the DPW. Haddad added that Litchfield will be missed.

"He is the consummate professional and has made my job as Town Manager easier," he said.

Litchfield will officially retire as the DPW Superintendent on March 29 and Sestito will assume his responsibilities on April 1.

The DPW oversees the highways, the cemeteries and parks, the RTF and the maintenance of all town buildings. The DPW, with its three big and five small sanders and four plows, is responsible for plowing the 37 of accepted roads in Cohasset and 11 miles of private ways during inclement weather.

Haddad said he will be negotiating Sestito's contract in the coming days.

with the family finding out who was there.

"There is no indication of anyone else that's ill," Godzik said.

Godzik said although highly communicable under the right circumstances, meningococcal illness is not common and it is rare to see more than a single episode. In most cases, the disease can be treated and is not fatal, he said. Some people carry the bacteria in their noses and throats and do not become ill.

At Jesse's wake Monday and funeral Tuesday where his sister and friends spoke, friends and family were remembering a kid who always had a kind word for others.

His friends said he always seemed happy. One girl said, "I'll always remember his smile." Another said, Jesse "never said anything negative about anybody."

Building moratorium to wait

No longer on warrant

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Residents will have a chance to vote on a variety of articles at Town Meeting. From ball fields to sewer plans, the votes collected on March 30 will determine a number of issues. However, there is at least one exception. A proposed article on a building moratorium was taken off the proposed warrant late last month to the frustration of its chief proponent, the Open Space Committee.

"We're very disappointed," said Deborah Cook, chairman of the Open Space Committee. "We thought this was an article that the town could benefit from."

The proposed article – or item of business before Town Meeting — asked for a restriction on the number of building permits, including renovations that are more than 50 percent of the home's fair market value, to nine for an 18-month period beginning on April 1, 2002.

A building moratorium is sometimes considered when a town is developing a Master Plan, as Cohasset is. The proposed zoning change would not have affected the AvalonBay proposal for 250 units of affordable housing.

The article, originally put on the warrant by selectmen, was withdrawn by the board after it learned the Planning Board would not hold a public hearing on the issue, effectively tabling it.

Planning Board Chairman Al Moore said similar issues were raised before the last Town Meeting in November when zoning articles were presented to the board too late.

"We told the town that zoning articles need to be thoroughly examined before it hits Town Meeting floor," Moore said. "This came at us at the 11th hour and we just don't have enough time to dissect it."

Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed said he understood the intent of the article but felt there wasn't enough analysis put into it.

"With these kind of zoning bylaws the proponents really need to start early in order to examine the effects it could have," he said. "I think the moratorium is a little unreasonable."

Town Planner Liz Harrington said she was in favor of a building limitation bylaw that was pegged to an average growth rate. The average number of building permits issued in the last five years is in the high teens and Harrington said that limiting the number to nine over an 18-month period is too restrictive.

"If the intention is to guard against major fluctuations then I think it's responsible," she said. "But an average rate would work better and be less limiting."

Harrington added that a building moratorium is usually issued in cases where there is a declining amount of school space, or water resources, or other such resources.

"There needs to be a compelling reason to pass the bylaw," she said.

Cook said the Open Space Committee wanted this article passed because the committee wanted to take more time to look at the open space in town while the Master Plan was being developed.

"A lot of people are concerned about the masionization of the town and we wanted some time to look into preserving the land around town," she said.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he was not in favor of the moratorium.

"If you start limiting the amount of growth a town can experience you limit the amount of money it can make from the tax levy," Haddad said.

Cook said she wasn't sure whether the Open Space Committee would bring the article back to special Town Meeting next November.

State antes up for roads and bridges

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund announced the Swift Administration is planning an early release of $53,393.76 in local aid for Cohasset to fund transportation projects in the town, part of a total $50 million release of additional Chapter 90 funds for FY02. The early release of the funding will allow communities wide latitude in planning upcoming road and bridge construction.

This allotment is in addition to the $52,763 from the FY02 budget, for a total of $106,156.76 for this fiscal year.

With the early release of additional monies, cities and towns will be allowed more time to budget local aid into their road and bridge spending plans and permit them more latitude to prioritize projects. The state typically releases local aid – or Chapter 90 funding – in the late spring, the time when communities are gearing up for the road and bridge construction season.

Chapter 90 funding is allocated to cities and towns based on a formula which factors in the number of miles of local roadway, population, and the employment rate in a given community. The funding is reimbursed to cities and towns on pre-approved transportation projects as construction unfolds.

Schools need to do more homework on state audit

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The Cohasset School Department is taking a response it received from the Department of Education regarding its corrective action plan in stride.

When the school department was audited last year, it was required to submit an corrective action plan detailing what changes it was going to make in order to be in compliance with all of the DOE's regulations. Last week, the school department revealed the DOE's review of its plans.

"Some of them we were surprised about and others we weren't," said Curriculum Director Steve Kaplan.

The audit was conducted last year and concentrated on four areas: special education, civil right requirements, Title I and nutrition. The report evaluated different aspects of each program and categorized them into commendable, partially implemented, not implemented, and issues requiring a response. Of the more than 30 issues the schools needed to formulate a correction plan for, approximately 13 were deemed partially implemented, 16 were implemented and three were not implemented at all.

Supt. Edward Malvey and Kaplan have scheduled a meeting with the DOE next week to have the department clarify some of its decisions.

"This is all just procedural," Malvey said. "We don't have any disagreements with the department we just want to feel comfortable that we're on the right tract."

Malvey added he requested the meeting to ensure that the schools have more communication before resubmitting the corrective action plan. He said if the DOE asks the department to make further adjustments it would obviously comply.

In a letter to Malvey, the DOE outlined what the school department needed to do in order to be in compliance.

"Please provide the DOE with your written assurance that these requirements for correction will be implemented by your school district within the time frames specified," the letter states. The report asks the department to submit its response by July 15, 2002 and on other issues asks to be informed of the department's progress by Jan. 15, 2003.

Some of the issues that DOE deemed the department had taken care of include: providing copies of the student handbook to employees and the public, providing dates, agendas, attendance sheets and training materials regarding civil rights training, and providing a copy of the evaluation process, developed by the district diversity committee, for examining and rectifying policies and programs.

A few issues that are partially approved and need further examination include the department not addressing the development of a schedule of specific programs to be evaluated, the district did not address how it provides program accessibility to students with limited physical mobility at each school during construction, and the district's response did not include how counseling is provided to prospective students with disabilities.

After receiving the results of the audit it was up to the school department to create a Corrective Action Plan. The plan needed to include the department's strategy for correcting the programs the DOE said were either partially implemented or required a response.

Plaza, utility articles removed

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Two of the more controversial articles to be voted on at Town Meeting warrant were withdrawn from the warrant Tuesday.

Donald Staszko's citizens' petition, which would essentially allow him to expand the Super Stop & Shop plaza, was removed along with an article proposed by the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, which asked residents to approve a surcharge of electric and cable bills to bury underground utilities.

Staszko has been seeking to expand Cohasset Plaza for a number of years, but according to Town Manager Haddad, felt he didn't have enough support this year to have the article pass.

Because the plaza lies in the watershed protection district – an exemption to the current bylaw – Staszko can't go before the Zoning Board for a special permit to extend the highway business use some 200 feet into the abutting residential zone. Under the existing bylaw, a use permitted on one portion may be extended by up to 200 feet into the other portion by special permit if both portions of the property were under common ownership before zoning district lines were adopted and are not in the watershed protection district.

Rizzo's, article asked residents to support a surcharge that would be placed on all cable and telephone bills. The money generated from this tax would be used to bury the utilities at a time when the village will already be undergoing construction due to the revitalization project.

"It's time sensitive and if it's not done when the (sidewalks) are torn up, it's unlikely the town will tear them up again," he said in a previous interview.

Rizzo, head of the CRC a private company working in conjunction with the village task force, ran into objections from both the selectmen and the Planning Board.

One of the biggest concerns was the cost, the project was estimated to cost an estimated $900,000. However, Rizzo said doing the project in conjunction with the excavation and construction work for the village project would save about $500,000.

Neither Staszko nor Rizzo could be reached for comment before the Mariner went to press.

Unique fence gets go-ahead

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

An Atlantic Avenue homeowner can get a special permit to install a fence in the flood plain to delineate her property line.

The unique, 56-foot-long fabric fence will be anchored by varying strengths of twine to horizontal steel pipes and vertical steel posts in eight-foot sections. The fence is designed to partly breakaway under certain wind or water conditions. Thicker twine would be used at one end of each section that would keep the fabric attached to the steel pole preventing the material from flying completely off the posts.

The Zoning Board didn't agree with the neighbor's argument that the flagging effect of broken-away fabric onto his property was a problem. The board pointed out that fences are allowed along the perimeter of property throughout town and any type of fence could fall onto a neighbor's property in stormy conditions, to be removed as soon as possible.

The board also did not think the proposed fence would divert water and therefore did not pose a problem.

The homeowner, Janice Reiter, lives in the Gropius House at 357 Atlantic Ave. The late world-renowned architect Walter Gropius, who pioneered the "modern look," designed the house, which is on the National Register of Historic Places.

But the lawn of the Gropius house looks like it belongs to the McNeary home next door, hence Reiter's interest in delineating her property line over objections from the McNearys at 355 Atlantic Ave. Both homeowners are relatively new to the neighborhood and bought their homes from previous long-time neighbors, who got along fine.

ZBA chairman Woody Chittick said he hoped the fence would "do what the engineers advertised it would." The board, which pointed out the decision can be appealed, approved granting a special permit with conditions that will include the most current design specifications showing the effect of wind and water velocity on the fence.

Chittick hoped the decision would be put any fence dispute to rest — but board member Barbara Power warned she thought the issue would end up in court.

"I'm not sure in this case, a fence made good neighbors," Chittick said, referring to the oft-quoted line in a poem by Robert Frost.

Use variance bylaw due for an encore

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Don't expect "use variances" to slip through this year's annual Town Meeting without a debate.

Last year, a citizens' petition prohibiting use variances for solid waste facilities was amended on the floor of Town Meeting. The amendment, banning all use variances, won the necessary two-thirds vote.

But later, some said the voters, who had already sat through eight hours of Town Meeting, didn't fully understand its implications and gave the OK because the Planning Board proposed the amendment.

An article on this year's warrant would reinstate the Zoning Board's ability to grant use variances under certain stringent conditions. A use variance would allow a use in a particular district that is otherwise prohibited. The exception would be a sanitary landfill use within the Water Resource District.

Although use variances are extremely rare, ZBA chairman Woody Chittick said it is something the zoning bylaw should have in its repertoire.

"The standards are so high that they are given out infrequently," Chittick said. "But there is always an exception to a rule and if someone is able to meet the very high standards then there are probably extraordinary circumstances."

Selectmen are also recommending the article.

But voters at the March30 Town Meeting can expect plenty of objections from the Planning Board, especially Bob Sturdy who proposed the amendment last year.

Sturdy at a recent Planning Board meeting said the zoning bylaw should provide a degree of protection from what happens next door.

"Having a use variance allows use zoning to be controlled by five people (on the ZBA)," he said.

Peter Pratt agreed saying use variances can be used improperly.

On March 5, my class and I went to Moose Hill. We got to see how they made maple syrup. First we talked about what we were going to see. Then we went on the trail and saw the spigot letting out sap into the bucket. We also saw what they use to get the sap out. My group went to the sugar house. There we saw how they boil the sap. It takes a lot of sap to make maple syrup. We got to try some real maple syrup. Boy was it good! We also got to pet the sheep that were at Moose Hill. My group saw the vessel that the Native Americans used to cook maple syrup. At the end of our tour, we got to have lunch on the bus.

Martial arts teacher opens new chapter

Writes book on Tai Chi

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

In a large studio basement, with spears and swords adorning the walls, John Loupos makes himself at home. His studio, Jade Forest, has been providing area residents with a chance to learn about Kung Fu, Tai Chi and internal arts since 1984.

The Hull resident and father of one just finished his first book, "Inside Tai Chi — Hints, Tips, Process and Training for Students and Teachers."

Tai Chi is a martial art/health care practice which involves slow, fluid movements of the body in conjunction with the development of the mind.

"Some practice Tai Chi for spiritual reasons, some for martial arts and others for stress relief," Loupos said.

He said the discipline of Tai Chi helped him in writing the book.

"The writing process itself was indeed reflective of my own Tai Chi," he said. "The difference is in writing I didn't have my audience standing right there before me so I needed to adjust my communication style."

Loupos was raised in Plymouth where he began his study of martial arts. He started Karate at the age of 13 and studied for seven years prior to his first exposure with Tai Chi.

"Tai Chi seemed like a natural path for me," he said. "Even as a young man I thought it was a great resource toward my own personal growth and self-actualization."

Now, he's trying to get as many people as possible involved in the discipline.

"Between the Kung Fu and Tai Chi programs I offer quite a range of different classes," he said. "I don't teach Tai Chi to children because it's too cerebral for most kids and usually by mid-adolescence most kids can handle the introspection of Tai Chi."

Nancy Hurrell, a student of Loupos' and resident of Braintree, said he is an excellent teacher. Hurrell moved to the South Shore from Texas were she participated in Tai Chi classes, but said studying under Loupos is different.

"When you go to a Tai Chi class it's going to be influenced by the personality of the instructor," she said. "John (Loupos) shows us how important each move in and is much more in depth and intricate than my previous experiences."

Hurrell, who attends one to two classes a week, said it's obvious that Loupos knows how to teach Tai Chi.

"We don't just learn moves," she said. "We learn concepts."

Loupos came to town when he was looking to expand his studio in Scituate. He came across the Cohasset location at 130 King St and felt it was a perfect fit. Loupos is now the owner of three Jade Forest studios, the others being in Rockland and South Dakota.

"I had a student who decided she needed to do something of more value in her life," Loupos said. "She had be taking lessons for a while and when she moved to South Dakota I encourage her to open a studio."

Loupos, who stands over six feet tall, said people don't realize how beneficial Tai Chi can be until they begin practicing. He said that for anyone who is interested in discovering human potential, Tai Chi can provide them with an outlet of exploring this interest.

"There's a magical quality about it," he said. "People are always really surprised at the vast range it offers."

Loupos contends that Tai Chi's benefits also extend into the physical realm. He added that the elderly can particularly benefit from practicing Tai Chi.

"The first thing Tai Chi does is to slow people down, enabling them to feel more in control of what really counts in life," he said. "Tai Chi not only improves balance to prevent falls, but it builds strong bones thus offsetting many of the effects of degenerative bone disease."

Loupos said the biggest challenges that people face who are beginning Tai Chi involves letting go of chronic stress. He added that it takes a great deal more work and change than most people envision.

"The superficial aspects of Tai Chi, the slow movements and the form, are fairly easy to accomplish," he said. "But to really get it right you have delve deeper and you will encounter increasingly demanding intricacies which require a body and mind less burdened by stress and tension."

Tai Chi Day is April 6

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Jade Forrest, 103 King St., will celebrate World Tai Chi Day with an open house on April 6.. The event will feature a demonstration of Tai Chi as well as a book signing by its owner and teacher, John Loupos.

Loupos is hosting the event in conjunction with the release of his first book, "Tai Chi — Hints, Tips, Process and Training for Students and Teachers."

"My book is one of the very few works to examine Tai Chi's application as a discipline in mindfulness and as a means to self-actualization," he said. "Even in the more technically oriented 'how to' sections of the book I go into some detail in explaining not only 'how,' but 'why.'"

In his book, he attempts to bridge some of the gap that has existed between a traditional Eastern discipline and conventional Western medicine and psychology. The book is aimed at three groups, the first is the existing Tai Chi community; the second is those who have not experienced Tai Chi; and the third is health-care service providers, who may be interested in less invasive healing practices.

"My hope is that this book will serve as some small catalyst in the Tai Chi growth experience for all those who read it, teachers and students alike," he said.

Residents are encouraged to celebrate World Tai Chi Day at the studio on April 6. The celebration will be from noon-1:30 p.m.

Hingham militiaman musters for local history

Hope others will 'enlist'

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Most children love a parade. So when little Amy, 6-1/2, and Kyle, 3-1/2, see their father dressing up in colonial garb, the first question they ask is, "Are we going to a parade today, Daddy?"

The militia, which has annual dues of $25, will provide most of the garb and equipment.

For Rick Desmarais, who is a member of the Hingham Militia, stepping back some 275 years or so never gets routine. He remembers how he felt as a boy of 11, when his brother took him to Lexington Battle Green to see a reenactment of April 19, 1775 where 70 colonists faced British soldiers in the skirmish that started the War for Independence.

"It fascinated me," Desmarais recalled about the event that was part of the nation's bicentennial celebrations in 1976. He also went to the Bunker Hill Pavilion to see "Whites of Their Eyes," a documentary-style film recreating the Battle of Bunker Hill in which an officer told the colonial militiamen, "Do not fire until you see the whites of their eyes!"

"That bicentennial year got me interested in the Revolutionary War ear," he says.

Desmarais and other members of the Hingham Militia — a Hingham tradition since the town's tercentennial in 1975 — hope others with an interest in history will come forward to "join up." The group, which takes part in a range of parades and events throughout the year including Scituate's St. Patrick's Day Parade this past Sunday, Hingham's Fourth of July Parade and Lincoln Day observances, is actively recruiting new members.

Rick Desmarais explains some of the authentic-looking gear members of the Hingham Militia carry.

STAFF PHOTOS/ALAN CHAPMAN

Rick Desmarais, a member of the Hingham Militia, is parade ready as he stands in his living room.

It wasn't until Desmarais, now 37, and his wife, Sue, moved to town in 1994 that he accidentally discovered the Hingham Militia. The Hingham resident was on a bike ride that April when he heard something, which warranted investigating and ended up rekindling his passion for colonial history.

"I heard a fife and drum," he recalled, so he biked over the check it out and found the Hingham Militia practicing for the upcoming Bunker Hill Day Parade at (militia captain) Brian McSweeney's house on Union Street.

Before Desmarais knew it, the militia helped outfit him in colonial gear. He marched in his first parade later that month. But it wasn't until the summer and the Fourth of July in which the militia leads the parade that finishes in Hingham Square to the cheers of thousands of local spectators that he was completely "hooked."

"That is the most fun event we do all year," he says.

Nowadays Desmarais — who in real life is a manufacturing manager with Mitek, a division of Johnson & Johnson — holds the position of sergeant of history for the militia, whose official name is 2nd Suffolk Regiment 1st Company of Foot.

Although it was the open space that drew he and his wife to town, Hingham's history has added tremendous appeal. Desmarais, who, in colonial dress, led tours of Hingham Square historic sites a few years ago during the summer, enjoys sharing stories about one of the town's early militiamen and best-known historic figure, Maj. Gen. Benjamin Lincoln. As Washington's second in Command, Lincoln accepted the sword of surrender from Corwallis' second in command at Yorktown in 1781.

Early colonial militiamen wore whatever they had, Desmarais explains. All males 18-60 were required to drill once a month on the town green. Later when the Continental Army was formed that the outfits became more uniform; the Hingham Militia of today resembles more of the 1776 era, he says.

The uniform includes a tri-corner hat, coat, vest, shirt, britches and leggings. Militia members carry a haversack and leather cartridge box to store 24 gunpowder cartridges. They fire their muskets during events and parades to the delight of most youngsters. But firing muskets can set off car alarms and make the pigeons that roost under a bridge near Boston's City Hall Plaza go crazy, Desmarais says with a smile.

The militia, which has annual dues of $25, will provide most of the garb and equipment but as time goes by most members pick up a lot of their own gear through catalogs and other sales. They also get together for "cartridge rolling parties" to fill and roll the pages of old English text from the Farmers' Almanac with gunpowder.

Members carpool to the away events (about 10-12 a year) in two-to-three vehicles, and meet at Station Street if they're going south and the Plymouth River School if they're headed north. The militia, which makes a donation to the Lincoln Day celebration and Fourth of July Parade, gets a fee for most parades that is added to the treasury and is used for musket parts and other expenses.

Prospective members have to be able to walk the parade distance, and have to be 16 or older to carry a musket. The militia, which is open to women, is looking for a drummer. Kids can carry the banner, Desmarais says. In fact, members' families often made a day of it by coming along to the parades and other events.

There are currently about 20 in the Hingham Militia — about 10 consistently show for any event. Members come from Hingham and other South Shore towns such as Marshfield, Quincy and Hanson.

Desmarais says, when he gets up early to dress in his militia uniform for a parade, the adrenaline starts to flow.

"It's fun," he says. "There's a lot of camaraderie in the group, and you really appreciate the historical perspective when you go to some of these events."

For information about joining the Hingham Militia, call Desmarais at 781-749-2463.or Charlie Poor at 781-749-5214, or email him at bostonprayer@yahoo.com.

The list of upcoming events are; the Boston Patriot's Day Parade on April 19; the Memorial Day Parade in Hingham on May 27; Flag Day in Quincy on June 14; the July 4th Parade in Hingham; and Veterans Day in Hingham on Nov. 11.

Eternal spring

Yesterday was the first day of spring, a day to celebrate the end of the long winter that has kept us indoors and all bundled up in long coats and hats since November. For weeks now, almost imperceptibly, winter has been giving way to lengthening days and the bright sunshine that brings welcome warmth. Soon all those spring flowers and bulbs that we wait so long for will be bursting into bloom, bringing a smile to our faces. Easter is approaching.

As winter seasons go, we've gotten off easy here in New England. Towns have not had to battle the usual dreaded, budget busting Nor'easters and blizzards that bring several feet of snow from December to March. Cohasset has had only a couple of snow and ice storms this winter, and they were so minor they were hardly noticed.

How many times did you have to drag out the shovel this winter, if at all? Boots? Who needed them? In the blink of an eye, local ponds froze and unfroze. Temperatures dipped into the teens only a few times at night, and we don't think they ever plunged to near zero or even the single digits. What a boon for everyone's checkbook, not having to pay huge amounts of money for fuel bills. New England was spared the brutal winter storms that paralyzed parts of the Midwest. The Farmer's Almanac missed the mark, telling us to brace for a bad winter. They were wrong. People who love to ski are not happy about the winter of 2001-02 but we are not among them.

Of course we shouldn't forget that Mother Nature can still have one or two tricks up her sleeve, as she did a few years ago when much of the state was buried underneath a freak April Fool's blizzard. We are not out of the woods just yet.

Earlier this week, the morning after St. Patrick's Day in fact, a raw wind brought a nasty day of cold and slushy, wet snow. It came as a shock — a slap in the face — after last week's balmy, May-like temperatures. But even if we should get an unexpected reminder of winter's punch, the snow cannot last long and won't dampen our enthusiasm for getting the lawn and garden ready or breaking out the baseball glove that has been gathering dust in the closet. These are the days for flying a kite, playing hopscotch, marbles and jumping rope. We are sure that youngsters everywhere still enjoy these springtime pleasures.

Things could have been a lot worse this winter. Terrorism was on everyone's mind. The economy has had many people worried. The country is at war with shadowy forces — "evildoers." But as if to lift us out of the doldrums, we had the Patriots and the Super Bowl.

Things are looking up. The economy is on the mend and the Taliban is on the run, or so we are told. We have made it through some dark days, a darkness mostly of man's making. We have so much to be thankful for, which of course is what spring is all about.

Absentee ballots for town election

Absentee ballots for the annual town election April 6, are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noon Friday, April 5, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

1. Absence from the town during the hours the polls are open.
2. Physical disability.
3. Religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written signed request can be sent by mail, or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed and the signature of the applicant. A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter; sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by April 6 to be counted.

The Accu-Vote optical scan system will be used. Instructions to voters are printed on the ballot and any pen or pencil may be used. To vote, completely fill in the oval to the right of your choice. Secrecy sleeves are available at the check-in tables. The ballots can be inserted into the machine face up, face down, etc. and will be read. It is the usual policy to flip the ballot over so the blank side shows as they insert it into the machine. Voters who are uncomfortable with this should use the secrecy sleeve.

If you are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast your vote at the polling place, you may file a letter from your physician with your Town Clerk, stating that you are permanently unable to cast your vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot for you to sign and return will be mailed to you by the Town Clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

Harbor Revitalization

TO BOARD OF SELECTMEN AND PLANNING BOARD:

My name is Bob Ernst and I live at 17 Border St. - a beautiful location overlooking a beautiful, simple and close to natural New England harbor.

There has been much talk and much speculation about a plan to "revitalize" the harbor. It is the intent of this letter to voice my concerns and vision for "our" harbor.

At our recent meeting of Friends of Cohasset Harbor, we determined there has been no established "town governmental process" to determine, first, "Are there any real needs for the harbor at all?" We discussed the questions, "What is wrong with the Harbor? Is it accessible? Is it kid safe? Is it viewable? Is it aesthetic? (Lighting, telephone poles, etc.)" And we came to the conclusion that nothing was wrong with the harbor. In fact, every resident I speak with likes it just the way it is. Yes, we could spruce up the sidewalks and maybe change the fighting to be less intrusive to abutters, but the harbor is beautiful. You can see it as you drive by. It is New England. It is our New England.

So my point is, "What is 'revitalization'?" If revitalization means making our harbor look like Rowes Wharf in Boston so more tourists can park there, go to Kimball's and Atlantica, we are not for it.

Most of the harbor revitalization presentations revitalize only the economic interests of the businesses on the harbor, while actually reducing the benefits to the local resident and tax payers, because local residents then have to compete for use with tourists - especially on summer weekends.

Revitalization, to my way of thinking, is to increase usage and accessibility to local residents who live and pay taxes here. Real harbor revitalization would provide greater accessibility and safety around the harbor for our kids to ride bikes, skateboards or roller blades there; safer for moms and dads pushing baby carriages or walking their dogs.

Revitalization is having a place that will allow any resident of this town to drive by and actually see the harbor vs. the cars parked there and to see the stars vs. halogen overhead lights..

So the rub as I see it is this - For whom really is the harbor being revitalized? Because as far as I can tell, if the town really wants to revitalize the harbor for the benefit of the residents, that can be best accomplished by restricting street parking to resident permit stickers and by reducing traffic. The businesses there have every right to exist and be profitable - I use them. But it should also be their responsibility to find them satisfactory parking options (e.g., behind CRC office).

My suggestion is that before we start reviewing "revitalization solutions" that are partisan, we should determine what the residents of Cohasset want - if anything.

Grateful for doers

TO THE EDITOR:

About all that Cohasset lacks to be perfect is a train connection to Boston! A train that would make it easy to get to work, or to the cultural and entertainment riches of the Hub, and spare us the auto commute and Boston parking.

Not only do we have an attractive Common, a beautiful harbor, pleasant residential areas, a unique shore drive, a fine library, a comfortably shabby village, well-maintained churches and elaborate school facilities, we have also a wealth of organizations to address our interests and needs.

Most important of all, we have the people who created and will continue to create these organizations. I thought of this at a recent meeting convened by the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, attended by about a dozen representatives of various local non-profit organizations. I was impressed and grateful to be in the company of well-informed, fair and open-minded people, people with a history of service, people who hold positive views.

As I observed the well-mannered airing of different opinions, the obvious desire to result in a worthwhile and workable design and plan for implementation, the sharing of information and experience, and the wealth of the combined knowledge and common sense, I realized that these good people were just a sampling of the host of good citizens who have created the civilized ambiance the town enjoys. We should count our blessings and appreciate it more.

Too bad if I've embarrassed the attendees with extravagant praise (don't worry, guys, I won't hug anybody or send you gushy valentines)!

On the subject of fences: During the decades in which iron railings or fences were installed around King's Chapel, Old Granary Burying Ground, Louisburg Square and other historic places, Cohasset was rusticating with only a few farmers and fisherman. So perhaps iron is historically less apt than split log fences. Not being a museum devoted to memorializing any particular period, our choice should be a balance between economy and aesthetics, with due regard for modern regulatory requirements.

What Little Harbor sewer means to us

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

According to those who follow the thinking of the DEP and its relations with Cohasset, the State and the Town have a much better relationship than a decade ago. This is probably because of installation of sewers, which has already been accomplished in town, adoption of a town-wide Wastewater Management plan, additional Board of Health regulations relating to nutrients in our water bodies, lawn-care initiatives, and a burgeoning public awareness of the importance of better managing our environment.

Accordingly, the State may be willing to relax its position relating to our alleged violation of the EPA's Clean Water Act. As a part of the town-wide Wastewater Management Plan, the Sewer Commission has adopted a Facility Plan Supplement which recommends installing sewers in the Little Harbor area. In my opinion, if a vote at the upcoming Town meeting passes the Sewer Commission's article, the Town's commitment would be confirmed to the State. This could, therefore, protect the Town from any recourse by the State to try to impose a mandatory on-site priority district program during any interim period.

If the Town does not pass the planned sewer expansion, it would be subject to a requirement by the state to demonstrate what we will do to release us from the attorney general's judgment. In all likelihood the Board of Health would have to establish some kind of priority wastewater treatment district within the Little Harbor watershed.

The most important thing is to try to demonstrate a commitment to sewer the Little Harbor watershed as a part of the town's overall plan.

The board has had preliminary discussions about such an action, and what it might involve, such as subsidies for septic system upgrades and immediate enforcement of existing actions against delinquents within the watershed as well as possible mandatory Title V inspections for selected sites. The most important thing is to try to demonstrate a commitment to sewer the Little Harbor watershed as a part of the town's overall plan.

There are other elements of the plan which deal with the rest of the town, either by separate neighborhood sewer treatment plants or as a part of the Town's on-site treatment options. It is important for the town to identify all of the sewer treatment plant's capacity, both current and future, so that it can become available to current residents.

There does not seem to be a consensus in town to make it easy for developers by providing them with available sewer capacity; particularly when on-site treatment is environmentally equivalent or even preferable to installing sewers since it acts to recharge groundwater.

A vote for the Sewer Commission's plan will ensure that the town has established an environmentally desirable course for the future when funding becomes available. We never know how the State will act, but such a vote should enable them to release the Town from the threat being held over our heads.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

School Committee candidate:
There's a move afoot to include MCAS results on student transcripts for college applications. Is the MCAS an accurate measurement of a student's ability, knowledge-level or both?

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Jane Pescatore

The MCAS is as much an assessment of the school as it is of the individual taking the test. As such it has no place whatsoever on the transcripts of individual students.

The MCAS tests insure that schools are in compliance with the curriculum frameworks mandated by the state Department of Education. This test and the curriculum frameworks it's based on are unique to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. While the results might reflect some success in learning the specifics dictated by this state, it is irrelevant outside of Massachusetts.

From my perspective this test is in its infancy in terms of what it's purported to accomplish insofar as either the student or the schools are concerned. In many cases, particularly with regard to special needs students, it is tantamount to discrimination because it penalizes students who may learn differently or have difficulty taking tests as lengthy as the MCAS.

The state has much more work to do on this test before it becomes a viable reflection of a student's ability to learn or a school's ability to teach.

Selectman candidates:
How can the Town Manager's 12 percent raise be justified in these tough fiscal times?

SELECTMAN/Fred Koed

The proponents of the Cohasset Town Manager Act created one of the most powerful Town Manager positions in the state. With this power comes a great responsibility. While the Selectmen set the policy direction for the town, many administrative duties have shifted to the Town Manager. Serving as Town Manager is not an easy task, especially serving five Selectmen with various concerns.

Back in the early 1980s when I served as chairman of the Advisory Committee, Advisory was in charge of formulating the Operating Budget for annual Town Meeting. That responsibility has been shifted to the Town Manager.

Cohasset has seen many needed construction projects recently which all required the oversight of the Town Manager. While the School Committee has the purchasing responsibility in its realm, almost all other purchasing in the town of Cohasset has been centralized under the Town Manager's position.

The Selectmen have reviewed Mark's performance over the period of his last contract. With few exceptions, the Selectmen felt that Mark has done an outstanding job. For instance, while many communities in Massachusetts are struggling to maintain their bond ratings, Cohasset has just been upgraded again. This upgrade is due to the financial team that Mark Haddad has organized.

These are difficult times. The competitive realities are that good Town Managers are in even more demand in bad economic times. Haddad could in all probability do better than his $102,500 salary in another town. In fact, the town of Dedham was willing to pay up to a $115,000 salary for its next Town Manager.

Mark Haddad felt that he still wished to continue working for Cohasset. With Mark's knowledge of Cohasset's challenges, his educational credentials and experience, the Selectmen felt that it was in the best interest of all of the taxpayers in Cohasset to retain him.

SELECTMAN/Roger Q. Hill

There is no justification for the outrageous salary that the Selectmen have given the Town Manager.

Unless the Selectmen come to their senses, the Town Manager will have a salary of $102,000 on July 1 of this year. At $102,000, the Town Manager will not only enjoy a $12,000 pay increase over last fiscal year, he will have had his salary increased a whopping $40,000 in just five years, from $62,000 when he started with the town in 1997.

Do our Selectmen read the papers? Are they aware that Massachusetts is in a recession that forces the cutback of funds from the state to our town? What will the Selectmen tell us next year if the state still does not fund its share of our school buildings on time?

The Selectmen have really gotten themselves into a tight spot on this one. I have heard more negative feedback on this issue than on any other in the past...Is he really that good at his job? My taxes have never been higher, and are about to go up again. The School Department could have better used the $12,000 this year, and the $40,000 over the past five years. I would rather see new supplies for the schools, maybe a dozen or so new computers in our classrooms for each of the next three years.

Like many people in Cohasset, every time I think of what the Selectmen have done on this issue, I get more and more angry. There are so many better ways to spend $12,000 a year than on one employee, an employee who in my opinion is overpaid already. With all of the talk from Town Hall and from the State House about belt tightening, and with no effective increase for our schools, what are the Selectmen thinking?

SELECTMAN/ Ronnie McMorris

In these tough and uncertain fiscal times town spending should be strictly watched. Until the School Building Assistance problem is addressed and the town understands if a 10 percent cut in local aid will occur, all capital spending should be put on hold unless a severe need is demonstrated. Other budgetary items should also be kept in line. For this reason, the Town Manager's proposed salary increase next fiscal year was in the 5-1/2 percent range, and a contract was negotiated to that effect.

A few weeks ago, however, it was announced that Mark Haddad was a finalist for a position in another community. The Board of Selectmen were faced with a new decision — is it in the best interest of the Town of Cohasset to work to retain Mr. Haddad as our town manager. It is clear that the town is in the midst of three major projects and several smaller ones, that we will experience new leadership in the police, fire and public works departments, all coupled with much financial uncertainty at the state level. It is not the time to lose the person responsible for managing all of the above, especially a person with Mark Haddad's proven energy and financial strengths. The Board decided it was in the town's interest to maintain that stability of leadership, and to renegotiate the town manager's contract. From a strictly monetary perspective this was the least costly solution, and from an overall management perspective a wise decision.

During my years on the Board I have learned that the most important skill a Selectman can posses is the ability to put aside personal issues, to listen to all perspectives, and to always act in the best overall interest of the town. It is the only reasonable way to make those tough decisions.

Next week's questions:

Selectman candidates:
Do you think Cohasset Harbor is fine just the way it is?

School Committee candidate:
In the budgetary tug of war are "average" kids lost in the shuffle — losing out to special needs and programs for high achievers?

Responses should be brief — no more than 300 words — and must be received by 5 p.m., Monday. Candidates are asked to be specific and make every word count. Submissions will be cut if they exceed the word limit. (We use the word-count feature on the computer to determine the number of words.)Candidates may reply by e-mail at mford@cnc.com; by fax at 781-741-2931, or by dropping off their responses at the Cohasset Mariner office in the Hingham Journal Building, 73 South St., Hingham Square. A vote for Raggedy Ann

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Two months of balloting are over. The last vote has been cast and counted. The results are scheduled to be announced next Wednesday. The question that is on everyone's lips is to be answered at last.

Will Raggedy Ann, the doll beloved of little girls for the past 87 years, finally be elected to her rightful place in the National Toy Hall of Fame in Salem, Ore.?

Yes, Virginia, there is a National Toy Hall of Fame, and it's populated by such latecomers as Barbie, Mr. Potato Head, and Slinky, none of whom have had the staying power of Ann and her brother, Andy.

The floppy little red-haired doll with the candy-striped legs and the heart engraved with the words "I love you" has been around since 1915, when she was created by John Gruelle to entertain his ailing daughter.

"You can hug her. You can drop her on the floor. You don't have to put her on the shelf and protect her clothes," says Joni Gruelle, John's granddaughter, in what can be interpreted as a dig at the fastidious Barbie.

"You can hug her. You can drop her on the floor."

Joni runs the Raggedy Ann Museum in Arcola, Ill., possibly the only museum in existence dedicated to the memory of a single doll. Let's see Barbie and her zillion changes of clothes top that one.

Many of the toys that have earned a place in the National Toy Hall of Fame — 80 or 90 nominees are considered by a panel every year — were created or developed by accident.

Like the time President Teddy Roosevelt went hunting in Mississippi and the organizers of the hunt decided to make it easy for him by tying a bear cub to a stake in the woods for him to shoot.

Teddy, being a true sportsman, refused to shoot the helpless bear, which inspired a newspaper cartoonist to record the incident for posterity, which in turn inspired Morris Mitchom, who ran a toy shop in Brooklyn.

Mitchom created a toy version of the bear and placed it in the window of his shop, labeled "Teddy's Bear." The rest, as they are wont to say, is history.

Engineer Richard James was sitting in his office in a Philadelphia shipyard one day in 1945 wondering what he was going to do now that the war was over when a spring fell off his shelf and "walked" over a pile of books.

James borrowed $500, produced 400 springs, and set up shop in Gimbel's department store. He sold all 400 in 90 minutes, and the ever-popular "Slinky" was born.

During World War II, General Electric chemists, seeking a synthetic substitute for rubber, combined boric acid with silicone oil, then discarded the result as having no practical use.

But advertising man Peter Hodgson saw possibilities in the substance's properties. He borrowed $147, bought out GE's supply, packaged it as plastic eggs, and sold 30 million in five years as "Silly Putty."

And then there was the Wham-o toy firm that adapted a three-foot bamboo ring used in Australian gym classes and sold them as "Hula Hoops;" and the businessman who took a Filipino weapon and sold it as a toy called a "Yo Yo."

All those toys are now in the National Toy Hall of Fame. Don't you think it's about time for Raggedy Ann to join them?

Greenbush project threatens turtles and other species

GREENBUSH VIEW

MARTHA A. R. BEWICK

Saturday (March 10) was a beautiful sunny warm spring day, and a perfect day to come out of winter hibernation. That was the day wetlands ecologist Dr. Brian Windmiller came down from Concord to talk to a team of Greenbush corridor residents about the importance of vernal pool habitats, and the endangered turtles and species that inhabit them. As the days warm, the spotted turtle emerges from the small vernal pools seeking the sun. A little later in the spring, box turtles make their way through the woods, stopping at vernal pools. These are among Massachusetts "species of special concern," which are officially recorded by the Natural Heritage and Endangered Species Program.

With patience, and luck, and perhaps a pair of binoculars, you can see the spotted turtles, with their shiny black shell and yellow polka dots, basking in the sun on raised hummocks in the vernal pools. They get their food from vernal pools too — including salamander and frog eggs, and invertebrate species.

The group included students from Hingham Middle School, and residents of Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate and Quincy.

The turtle team came to learn how to identify these turtles, and the rarer box turtles, and how and when to find them. The team learned how to fill in reporting forms, and how to file them with the Massachusetts Natural Heritage Program. The group included students from Hingham Middle School, and residents of Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate and Quincy.

After discussion, Dr. Windmiller took the turtle team out to three vernal pool sites in Hingham, adjacent to the rail right of way, off of Kilby and Weir Streets. One of the students quickly spotted a wood frog in the leaves on the rail right of way, which was examined. The wood frog is an "obligate species" of vernal pools. That means that they are indicators of the existence of vernal pools, and need vernal pools for laying their eggs.

Windmiller scooped some leaves from the bottom of the pool with his net, and found a Mystic Valley Amphipod, a tiny invertebrate which is an endangered species, and provides turtle food. The team passed it around in a battered plastic cup before it was returned to the pool. Windmiller recommended that turtle spotters wear waterproof boots, and carry binoculars, and a camera, for turtle recording. He urged honesty in reporting, so that records will be true. After the field work, turtle team participants were sent off with observation and recording forms, illustrations of turtle species, and a good day's worth of information.

Advocates for Transportation Alternatives (AfTA) hired Windmiller last year to identify endangered wetlands species and vernal pools adjacent to the Greenbush tracks. This was done to ensure that a proper identification of environmental impacts has been made by the MBTA, and that proper protections are in place for endangered species, should the Greenbush project move forward.

AfTA's concerns about proper identification and protection of rare species, and their habitats, arose in the absence of appropriate MBTA studies of wetlands, vernal pools and endangered species.

The MBTA's Final Environmental Impact Report (FEIR) says that "the wildlife species inhabiting the Greenbush line corridor aren't expected to be negatively affected." No negative wildlife impacts are listed on the comparative transportation matrix. Yet the T acknowledges in the same document and on the same page that the track right of way is a "viable habitat", that the right of way is a "travel corridor between ecosystems", and that there will be the "loss of terrestrial habitat in the right of way" and "displacement of fauna." (FEIR V-153).

The MBTA, even after 15 years of studies and $13 million in Greenbush planning, never undertook an independent study of the rare species habitats which are vernal pools. This documentation was missing in the FEIR. The Environmental Impact Report recorded only those certified pools on record with the state. (The T has recently hired a wetlands ecologist from UMass/Amherst to begin to undertake vernal pool studies.)

Dr. Windmiller, in several days last summer and fall, identified some additional 17 vernal pools over and above the state documented records, many of which have since been certified by the Commonwealth. He now estimates that there are some 30 vernal pools immediately adjacent to the track bed in Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate which provide, with the surrounding shade trees, and travel corridors between ecosystems, the habitat for these rare species. AfTA believes that there will be an " appreciable loss of habitat of endangered or threatened species." The organization also believes that the T can avoid adverse impacts by constructing and expanding upon existing transit alternatives instead of building the destructive, invasive and expensive rail project.

Wetlands ecologist Dr. Brian Windmiller of Concord, standing in a vernal pool adjacent to the train track in Hingham, describes the Mystic Valley Amphipod to the Greenbush "Turtle Team" that includes residents from Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate and Quincy.

Dr. Windmiller exchanged greetings and information with John Richardson, Hingham's wetlands specialist and historian, who has observed and recorded these rare species over many years, before he headed back to Concord.

At the end of the day, John Bewick, President of AfTA, announced that students identifying and recording spotted or box turtles would receive a certificate for Scoops ice cream. If you or your class would like to join the turtle team, call AfTA for more information at 781-740-1613.

Just what were they thinking?

MUSIC BEAT

LANCE NORRIS

The Talking Heads got into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame last night, but not Kiss. Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers were also honored last night, but not Rush. The Ramones got in, but not The Clash. What is going on here?

Why are Chuck Berry, James Brown and Alan Freed in the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, but not Lee Dorsey?

Should Hank Williams, Louis Jordan and Ricky Nelson be in, but not Trini Lopez?

Little Richard is in, but not Little Eva.

Local boys Aerosmith got in last year. Why not Boston, or J. Geils, or The Cars? Do I dare mention The Modern Lovers?

John and Paul get in as solo artist, but not George and Ringo? 2/3. Well, George any way.

An international voting body of about 1,000 ŒRock experts select each years inductees. Artist are eligible for induction 25 years after the release of their first record, and criteria such as influence and significance of contribution are taken into consideration.

So why aren't Jim Croce, Harry Chapin or Jackson Browne in the hall? Maybe they figure putting James Taylor in as part of the Class of 2000 covered them on the sensitive folkies for a while.

The most criminal oversight? Bob Seger. He started putting out albums in 1966. He0s had 17 songs in the Top 40 and eight Platinum Albums. He produced Glenn Frey0s first single but most important of all, when he finally relented and let Chevy us his song "Like A Rock" in their commercials he opened the flood gates for the marriage of rock and Madison Ave.

16 years later it's hard to imagine watching TV without the songs of our youth not being used to shill the cars we0d drive if we didn't have to have a mini van for the kids.. Aerosmith's "Just Push Play" never would have been a hit without those Dodge ads being run every five minutes. Even Led Zeppelin finally cracked and let Cadillac use one of their songs this year.

The rolls of any Hall of Fame, like most any other list, are just shorthand for thinking, but what were they thinking when they put The Jackson Five in, but not The MC5. Oh, that's right: the MC5 are music for the people who make the cars, not the people who sell them.

The bottom line is this: Bonnie Raitt is in the hall of fame but Ratt never will be 2/3. But maybe that's a good thing

Lance Norris of Cohasset can be heard daily on WZLX 100.7.

CANDIDATES CORNER

McMorris to run for reelection

Roseanne "Ronnie" McMorris

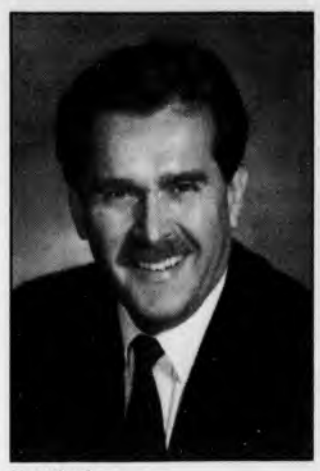
Selectman Roseanne "Ronnie" McMorris announces her candidacy for reelection to the Cohasset Board of Selectmen.

As a Selectman, McMorris has been instrumental in moving forward a number of initiatives including the Community Preservation Act, school renovation projects, the addition of a paramedic program to ambulance service and the master plan task force. She cites her dedication to issues affecting the environment and seniors and her service on the Conservation Commission, Council on Elder Affairs, Senior Housing Committee, Open Space Committee and the Growth and Development Committee.

"Over the past six years, I've appreciated the opportunity to serve our community as a Selectman," noted McMorris. "We've tackled many tough issues including much needed capital improvements to Cohasset's schools and infrastructure yet maintained the sound fiscal policies that resulted in the upgrading of the town's bond rating. I believe the next three years will bring an equal number of challenges to be addressed including development of senior housing, the finalization of a comprehensive master plan, revitalization of the village area and the planned restoration of Greenbush. We must approach each of these issues with a continued commitment to sound financial planning, efficient town management and conscientious stewardship of our natural environment. Equally important is that Cohasset maintain its diversity and outstanding quality of life, including the excellence of our schools."

"In seeking reelection I hope to follow through on my commitment to these important issues," McMorris said. A certified mediator and attorney, Ronnie is married to David McMorris, is the mother of Karen 19, a freshman at Emory University, Leah and Sarah, 16, sophomores at Cohasset High, and Rachel, 11, a fifth-grader at Deer Hill School. The McMorris family are 16-year residents of Doane Street.

Koed seeks second term



Fred Koed

Frederick R. Koed of 92 Pleasant St., Cohasset has announced his candidacy for reelection to a three-year term on the Board of Selectmen.

Mr. Koed is 50 years old, married to Lisa R. (Herstad) Koed and is the father of two daughters, Ashley, age 19, and Mariel, age 15. Koed has lived in Cohasset for 41 years, is a graduate of Cohasset High School (1969) and holds a Master of Science degree in public affairs from the McCormack Institute at the University of Massachusetts in Boston (1999).

Over the past 20 years he has served as chairman of the Cohasset Advisory Committee, a commissioner on the Cohasset Housing Authority and on the tenant selection committee for the Habitat for Humanity. In 1995 he was elected to the Cohasset Water Commission, where he served as chairman for almost three years through the difficult water emergency and construction phase. "By the end of my three-year term on the Water Commission, we had stabilized water rates, implemented many emergency improvements, developed a plan for future improvements and replaced old and malfunctioning water meters throughout the system. The Forest Avenue water main improved water pressure system-wide and fire protection along the length of Forest Avenue," he said.

In 1999 he was elected Selectman and currently serves as chairman. "As one of the Selectmen who served on the MBTA Greenbush Mitigation Committee, I feel an obligation to continue to represent the town of Cohasset and the interests of its citizens through the next phase of this project," he said.

Koed works for the Executive Office for Health and Human Services, ORI as a computer network administrator.

"I would like the opportunity to continue to serve the town of Cohasset in this important position. I can offer my experience working on and with many town boards in Cohasset. I believe I have the experience the town needs at this difficult time. I believe that after you have reviewed the credentials of all of the candidates for Selectmen, your choice will be clear. I ask for one of your two votes on Saturday, April 6, 2002."

Straughn keeps going strong

Two-sport star weighs baseball, hockey collegiate options

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Poor Tim Straughn.

It wasn't enough that the Cohasset High senior has had to talk to college baseball coaches. Now, on the heels of a phenomenal senior hockey campaign, it seems there is a high likelihood that hockey coaches may now be knocking on Straughn's door. And, as if that's not enough for the young man to have on his plate, there are a few more doors that will likely be opened by his recent admission to the National Honor Society.

"I've been talking to a few baseball coaches, hoping I might get some (financial) help there," said Straughn. "But people have been saying to me now that maybe I should look to talk to a few hockey coaches too. I'm thinking about it."

Oh, when will the persecution of this young man end?

OK, we jest...obviously. What high school senior doesn't dream of having the quality array of options that now face young Mr. Straughn?

Baseball has long been Tim's favorite sport. He has played it year round the last few years, something that showed last spring — when he led the Cohasset High team in hitting (.426 batting average), runs batted in and pitching (2.56 ERA, 27 strikeouts in 28 innings) — as well as in the summer when he earned a starting job with the Cohasset-Scituate Legion team. What makes him most attractive to college recruiters, though, is his desire to don the "tools of ignorance" and play catcher, the toughest position to fill at every level of baseball.

"I love playing catcher," he said, indicating that the dust, extra equipment, risk of injuries and having to squat a couple of hundred times on any given afternoon were far from a detriment. "You're really in to the game with every pitcher when you're a catcher. I like staying involved."

Tim has already been accepted at UMass-Amherst, where his older sister, Kelly, is currently a sophomore. He's also spoken with this school's baseball coach a few times.

Tim is still waiting to hear back on applications he sent to Holy Cross, St. Anselm, Merrimack and Northeastern. He figures he's still got a few months before he has to decide, and hopes to take advantage of Constant hard charging the net, as exhibited here by Cohasset captain Chris Caron, was just one of enticing and exciting qualities of this year's Skippers squad.

A look back on dream season

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset hockey team's dream season may have been cut short in the playoffs, but it still could not have been a better send-off for longtime (and now retired) coach Dennis Walsh.

The Skippers wasted no time in letting the rest of the EMass know this team was for real. The trounced their first three opponents, racking up goals at will against obviously inferior squads.

By the time they started South Shore League match play, they were already far and away the most prolific scoring team in the division. Not only that, but the defensive numbers were just as mind-boggling, as the Skippers held their opponents to well under a goal per game.

The team then began mowing down SSL foes like Mashpee, Harwich and Hull, for all intents and purposes sealing the game by the end of the first period, then keeping the score totals down to avoid humiliating the opponent. SSL coaches voted the Skippers co-winners with Mashpee for the league Sportsmanship Award in deference to showing such grace.

Their first real test of the season came against Norwell, the game which every year draws the biggest crowds on Cohasset's League schedule. This year, the Clippers managed to hang around with the faster, more disciplined Skippers en route to a 3-3 tie. CHS's only regular season blemish.

Mariner All-Scholastic Wrestling team

Cohasset's Baroudi, Littauer and McKenna named among areas elite

It was a banner year for wrestling in Marinerland, with 35 of our grapplers advancing through the sectional tourneys to the state championship meet. From this group, we limited ourselves to choosing only 14 for All-Scholastic honors.

It was a grueling process. Know that several of the wrestlers you see listed below as "Honorable Mentions" received strong consideration for the higher honor. However, after consulting with area coaches, these are the choices we made for our 2002 Mariner All-Scholastic Wrestling Team:

135 - Cohasset

Terry Baroudi

A tough luck wrestler, who lost heartbreakers at both states and all-states...finished fourth in one of the state's purported most competitive sectional brackets, losing both of his matches by one point...took fifth at the Div. 3 state championships, this time losing twice by a total of three points, including a 3-1 heartbreaker to eventual champ Duncan Banks (Carver) in the semis...qualified for the All-State tourney as an alternate, where he had the bad fortune of being paired first round with top seed Tony McDonald (Weymouth)...qualified for states last year as well, but couldn't compete due to a shoulder injury...has also played Cohasset High baseball and football the last few years, but now intends to concentrate solely on wrestling...Pilgrim Conference 2 All-Star...took second at the Whitman- Hanson and Cohasset tourneys...Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney: "Terry is a battler. He doesn't overpower people, but he's a very good technical wrestler and he has a way of keeping it close and competitive against the top wrestlers."

Chris McKenna - Junior
145 - Cohasset

Chris McKenna

His 20-10 record was deceiving, as most of his losses came when he was asked to "bump up" to wrestle in the 152 pound division... won several big matches in close meets for the surprising Pilgrim Conference champion Skippers...finished fourth at Div. 3 south sectionals, losing a pair of 4-2 heartbreakers to eventual third place finisher, Ryan Luttrell, of Keefe Tech...highlight of day was dominating Duxbury's higher seeded Doug Imbrogana, 14-2, in the quarterfinals...won two matches at the State championships to advance to the second day, where he lost a 3-1 heartbreaker to Ryan Luttrell in the pre-medal round...Pilgrim Conference 2 All-Star...only a second year wrestler...also a standout defensive back for the South Shore League champion football team... Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney: "Chris is a natural athlete, which helped him pick up wrestling pretty quick. When you consider he hadn't even wrestled before last year, what he's accomplished seems pretty amazing."

Shooting for the stars

C.H.S boys lax squad returns 18 lettermen, 187 goals and plenty of motivation

What can the Cohasset High boys' lacrosse team do for an encore in 2002, after making the state championship game a year ago?

As far as coach Kevin Orcutt's concerned, this year's goal is nothing less than a championship.

"We have a much tougher schedule, but with the quality and the depth we have going into this season, we should expect to be among the elite again," says the second-year mentor.

To describe the 20-game schedule as "tougher" may be understating the Skippers' situation. Based on last year's results, the league gave Cohasset a home-and-home series with number-one-ranked Duxbury, defending D2 state champ Hingham, and D1 powers Falmouth and Marshfield. Add to that non-league contests with Nantucket, Franklin and Hopkinton, all D2 tourney teams a year ago, and an exhibition game against Independent School League member Milton Academy, and it doesn't take a genius to realize that the Skippers could struggle to match last year's regular season record of 11-5.

"We will be well-prepared for whoever we face in the tournament," argues Orcutt. "We won't face any adversity that we didn't have to confront in the regular season."

Offensive Firepower

For their part, the Skippers will pose plenty of problems for anyone they face this season. On offense, they return five players who each scored at least 20 goals: co-captains Paul Previte (53 goals, 23 assists) and Eric Libby (27 goals, 31 assists), senior attackman Jason Moore (26 goals, 14 assists), junior attacker Curt Kahn (25 goals, 20 assists), and junior all-conference midfielder Matt Davis (20 goals, nine assists).

Previte and Kahn, both Bay State Games gold medalists last summer, will likely team up with Moore as the starting attack. Libby, coming off championship seasons with both the football and hockey squads, will move to midfield to help fill the void left by current Providence College play-that window of opportunity by getting off to a good start for the Skippers this spring.

"I'm hoping a few (scouts) might come out to see me play," said Tim.

Tim was hoping to make some serious inroads in this department this past fall by taking part in a number of local showcase events, but a severe ankle sprain put him on the shelf pretty much right up until the beginning of hockey season.

If he'd had a chance to attend the baseball showcases, hockey might now be a fleeting memory for Tim. As so often turns out to be the case in life, though, one door closing often leads to another one opening up, and Tim certainly helped nudge the door leading to a possible continuation of his hockey career with his sensational senior season.

Tim was the number one defenseman for the unbeaten Cohasset High hockey team this season. He scored 23 points (10 goals, 13 assists), the fifth best total on a team leaded with forward talent, and posted what may well have been the best plus/minus rating in Massachusetts with his +69 total. Suddenly, hockey at the college level is on his radar screen.

The most surprising aspect of this is that it is a surprise at all. On the surface, Tim would appear to have the whole package sought by collegiate hockey scouts. At 6-foot-2, and a solid 180 pounds, Tim has not only the requisite size to play at the next level, but (perhaps more importantly) the willingness to use it to his advantage. Let's just say Tim's no shrinking violet on the ice. Additionally, he is an excellent skater, is a far above average stick handler, and possesses a hard and accurate shot. Granted, there's a big leap from Div. 3 high school hockey to the collegiate game, but the raw talent is definitely there.

"Tim really seemed to come into his own this year," explained longtime Cohasset hockey coach Dennis Walsh. "He was always a good, solid player, but he really seemed to come in with a lot of confidence this season, and that let him show what he's capable of, which is quite a bit."

Walsh says Tim lacks the seasoning of most players preparing to move up to the collegiate ranks, but feels this is something he could overcome in relatively short order if given the chance.

Tim Straughn exchanged his skates and stick for a bat and cleats this week—phase two of the come-on-down-college-scouts push.

"I think if Tim hung in there, he'd eventually get used to the faster game in college," appraised the longtime coach. "Let's face it, there aren't too many kids his size who can skate that well."

Walsh got Tim into an elite coaches league this summer on the ice, where he had the opportunity to play for highly respected Hingham head coach Garrett Reagan. He held his own, which helped launch him into his senior year brimming with self-assurance.

It's clear that Tim's love for hockey does not pale much at all to his passion for baseball. He has been skating since the age of two, and played youth hockey in the fall and winter throughout his elementary and middle school years.

For several years, he has lifted weights year-round, concentrating more on hockey specific toning in the fall and winter, and baseball in the spring and summer. This past September, he and brother Ted, a C.H.S. freshman hockey and baseball player, hooked up with personal trainer Joe Hayes, a former Scituate star trackster and football player, to hone-in even more on sport-specific goals.

Tim's parents were recently approached by the coach of the Breakers, a local minor league hockey franchise, about a possible tryout for Tim. They politely declined, telling him college was their son's agenda. But it did serve to convince Tim that maybe there is a future in hockey.

"I love playing hockey, and I'd like to continue playing in college, whether it's intramural or whatever," he said. "Right now, things are still pretty wide open."

As offered initially: nice to have options.

C.H.S. hockey team feted

Coach Walsh enjoys fond and fitting farewell

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset hockey team held its breakup dinner Monday night at Atlantica.

After the meal in one of Cohasset's top restaurants, retiring head coach Dennis Walsh thanked his final team for a great season — Cohasset High's first-ever unbeaten campaign on the ice (19-0-1) and a trip to the sectional semifinals.

"It was a great, great year," said Walsh. "And I wanted the kids to know how much I appreciated all of the hard work they put in to it. It was a great way to go out for me."

A record turnout of 140 attended the annual event, including a large number of Cohasset High hockey alumni and their families, to help send off Walsh, a Cohasset High coach for nearly 30 years.

"It was a great night," said the outgoing coach. "It was great to see all of those old faces."

Walsh praised the Cohasset High Hockey Boosters for putting together arrangements for the night, as well as for all the organization did over the course of the season, and expressed particular gratitude to Boosters President Jo-ann Pilczak.

"I don't know where we would have been without her this year," said Walsh. "Jo-ann is absolutely tireless. I don't know how she keep track of everything."

The Boosters, along with the team, presented Walsh with a beautiful Chelsea Shipstrike Mantle Clock. As an avid sailor, Walsh certainly appreciated this gift coming from one of the oldest and most respected clock manufacturing companies. The Chelsea Co. has been in business for more than 150 years. Team captain Eric Libby performed the honors.

The Cohasset High Class of '87 got together to raise enough money to send Coach Walsh and his wife, Catherine, on a cruise out of Maine. Former players Phil Mahoney and Bob Durkin presented their old coach with these tickets.

Assistant Coaches Benji Watson, Archie Rasmussen and Peter Sandblom were also presented with team gift certificates to area restaurants. And Chris Walsh, Dennis' son, was awarded a memento watch for serving as team manager these last several years.

Walsh and his coaches presented all of the varsity players with either letters or pins (if they'd received letters previously). The JV players received certificates.

The eight graduating seniors also received memento watches.

The boosters presented all varsity players, coaches and Athletic Director Ron Ford with a laminated plaque carrying a team picture and the scores of all games this season.

Boston Bruins General Manager Mike O'Connell, the father of star junior forward Greg O'Connell and a frequent contributor at practices, was the keynote speaker. He offered his own glowing observations on the way this group of young men has matured together on and off the ice, and he pointed to this season's accomplishments as proof positive of what can be accomplished through hard work and a strong spirit of cooperation.

The boosters wanted to present "volunteer coach" O'Connell with a gift certificate, but he requested that the money be turned back to the equipment account.

Senior defenseman Tim Straughn, a sensational league all-star defenseman, was presented with the Norm Delaney Award, which honors the team's top senior scholar-athlete. Tim is a member of the National Honors Society. The award is named posthumously in honor of the creator of the Cohasset High Hockey Boosters. Delaney's sons, Matt and Mark, were on hand to present the award.

The only other individual honor, The Barney Robinson Unsung Player Award, went for the second straight year to sophomore defenseman Mike Devine, whose steady two-way play was often overshadowed by the scintillating play of fellow blueliners Straughn and Eric Libby (both league all-stars), forwards O'Connell (a league best 59 points), John Durkin (36 points) and Tom Anderson (34 points) and goalie Dan Kinchla (a league best 0.8 goals against average).

"I thought Mike deserved to be an all-star this year," explained Walsh, "but he's only a sophomore and we already had six guys on the team so other coaches didn't go along with it. I think he'll be the best defenseman in the South Shore League next year."

being able to bring down a rival like Norwell carried over into the team's next test: Hanover-the 2001 Div. 3 state champions, and the team formerly viewed as the benchmark of excellence in the SSL (before moving this season to the Patriot League). Cohasset outshot the perennial powerhouse Indians 15-2 in the first period and shocked the defending champs with a 5-4 victory.

"We knew that we could play at a certain level, and that proved it," said Walsh.

By the time the second go round with Norwell arrived, the Skippers had won six in a row, and were primed for a revenge match-up. This time, the Skippers played like they knew they should, annihilating the Clippers, 10-0.

Walsh felt heading in to his final season that he had a team capable of making some noise in the state tourney, and appropriately scheduled non-league games he believed would best prepare his team for the post-season challenge, such as Hanover.

Another such team was Scituate, who the Skippers played in the final week of the regular season for what all felt would be a good primer before the South Sectionals got underway.

Instead, the Skippers dominated the tourney bound Sailors, 4-0, out skating a squad that played very competitively (against teams such as Hingham, Duxbury and Hanover) in a loaded Patriot League this year.

The amazing thing about this Skippers squad was that it was beating some of the best competition around, and making it look quite easy. The final statistics say the Skippers scored 7.8 goals per game, but anyone who came out and saw some of their games know that it could have been well over 10 if Walsh wasn't such a class act and nice guy.

After commanding the South Shore for three months, the Skippers rightfully dominated the All-Star team selections as well. Forwards Greg O'Connell, John Durkin and Tom Anderson (all of whom were in the top four in scoring in the SSL) and Matt Davis were among the honorees. Defensemen Tim Straughn and Eric Libby and goalie Dan Kinchla rounded out the list of All-Stars for the Skippers.

Cruising into the playoffs at 19-0-1 and with the number one seed, Cohasset handily defeated a surprisingly tenacious Bishop Feehan team, 3-1, in the opener.

For obvious reasons, the team felt disappointed after their 3-1 loss to third seeded Bourne in the semifinals of the South Sectionals.

But after 30 long years, Walsh can head into retirement after finishing the best season of hockey he has ever coached.

Dan Littauer - Senior
152 - Cohasset

Dan Littauer

Was considered a strong contender to reach the New England championships, but injuries pretty much dashed that dream...came back from what virtually everyone considered a season ending separated elbow injury a week before sectionals, and wound up finishing second here, losing in the championship match, with his elbow swollen and extremely sore, to number one seed Mike Ragusa of Foxboro...vulture's luck struck again the following week at the state championships, as Dan broke his hand in his third match, which he wound up losing 7-4, ending his high school wrestling career and his quest at reach All-States, which he missed pulling off by just one spot last season... despite wrestling only one regular season match (a huge win in the league championship clincher over Rockland), Pilgrim Conference 2 coaches still unanimously selected him to his fourth straight all-star team...would like to wrestle in college... has been accepted to B.C., Washington & Lee and Wheaton, and applied to eight other colleges, including Harvard...a two time Mariner All-Scholastic...Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney: "The way Dan came back from this injury and just ripped through everyone until the championship match (at sectionals) shows what kind of wrestler Dan is and how committed he is to the sport. He's obviously one of the top wrestlers in this area."

Frank Sforza - Senior (Capt.)
130 - Rockland

Frank Sforza

Quite possibly one of the most dominating wrestlers in state history, Sforza won every title he could this season... Capping his five-year high school career with his first-ever New England title, Sforza also won the Div. 3 sectional, Div. 3 state, and All-state titles...The divisional title was Sforza's fourth-consecutive (winning at 103, 112, 119, and 130), while the All-state crown was his first...A highly-superior technical wrestler, no opponent he faced this season could beat him, getting through the year unscathed with a 50-0 record...In his five-year wrestling career, Sforza has amassed 202 wins, while recording only 20 losses...The senior was taken down only once this year, and that was at All-states...For the past two years, Sforza has competed at the National Level with Team New England...This April, the he hopes to attend the Senior National Championships in Cleveland for a shot at a top eight finish in the country and All-American status...The Pilgrim Conference 2 and Patriot League All-star and two-time Mariner All-Scholastic is considering attending Iowa Central Jr. College on a scholarship next fall. Rockland coach Tim Brown: "I've never seen anything like him at the high school level. I'll be lucky if I coach another 15 years and get a guy like him. I've really been blessed to work with him. He's a special kid."

Dave Laramee - Junior
119 - Rockland

This talented junior had some big shoes to fill in the 119 slot, formerly owned by teammate Frank Sforza, and he more than delivered...Up from 112 this season, Laramee—a two-time Mariner All-Scholastic wrestler—won the Div. 3 South Sectional title and placed third at the Div. 3 state championships, earning a trip to the All-states, where he won a match...While not the strongest grappler, the Pilgrim Conference 2 and Patriot League All-star was able to overpower his opponents with his impressive technical skills and superior conditioning...Also a highly-talented cross country runner for RHS, Laramee made the Mariner All-Scholastic team in the sport last fall...Laramee will be one of the top returnees to the talented Bulldog squad next season. Rockland coach Tim Brown: "He's got great technical skills. He's very tough on top. He can turn a kid on his legs, do cradles and arm bars. He does a lot of off-season work and showed up this year in excellent shape. He's such a nice kid."

Dave Laramee

Paul Robinson - Freshman
103 - Rockland

Although just a freshman, Robinson made a huge impact on the South Shore wrestling scene this year...The Patriot League and Pilgrim Conference 2 All-star went into this season's Sectionals with an unbeaten record...At the Div. 3 sectionals, Robinson finished second...He followed that up with a fourth-place finish at the Div. 3 state championships and a trip to All-states...There, Robinson won two matches...Although not yet technically developed, Robinson overpowered his opponents with his strength and aggressiveness...Robinson will be among the top returnees to the Bulldog squad next season. Rockland coach Tim Brown: "He's able to beat guys with more technical skills and more experience because of his aggressiveness and strength. He's extremely strong for a 103. He's only a freshman and still has a lot of great things ahead of him."

Zach Gorman - Junior
125 - Rockland

Zach Gorman

Had a solid season wrestling in almost every tourney final he could but constant meetings with Duxbury rival and All-state champ Kyle McCarthy spoiled his title hopes...Despite this, Gorman racked up 25 wins...Gorman finished second to McCarthy at the Div. 3 South Sectionals and went on to take seventh at the Div. 3 State Championships...A highly-skilled grappler, Gorman uses quickness and strength to dominate his opponents...A Pilgrim Conference 2 All-star, Gorman is making his second appearance on a Mariner All-Scholastic team, having made our cross country squad last fall...The junior will be among the top returnees to the Rockland squad next season. Rockland coach Tim Brown: "Zach ran into Kyle at many meet this season and wrestled very well. He's a solid athlete and stays in great shape throughout the year. I expect good things from him next season."

Dan Cotrone - Junior
Heavyweight - Hanover

While Cotrone's successes last season were a nice surprise for the Hanover squad, this year they were expected...In just his second varsity year in the heavyweight slot, Cotrone has established himself as one of the better "big men" on the South Shore...A Div. 3 Sectional champion last year, Cotrone finished second at the meet this season by a hard-fought one-point decision...The placing qualified the junior for the Div. 3 State Championships, but a torn meniscus in his knee sustained during the practice week kept him out of the competition...A Patriot League and Pilgrim Conference 2 All-star, Cotrone was thrust into the starting spot last year after just winning eight matches as a freshman when injury prevented the starter from competing...A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic, Cotrone went 18-5 last year and improved to 25-2 this season, including going 3-0 in tournaments this year...The top returnee to the Hanover squad, Cotrone will captain the team next season. Hanover coach Bill Dunn: "He's an atypical heavyweight. Whereas most heavyweights just flop around, he's quick. He has the technique. He's exciting to watch."

Dan Cotrone

Mike Finneran - Sophomore
103 - Hingham

Mike Finneran

Just 4-22 during his freshman year, Finneran's hard off-season work paid of in a more than 30-win season this year...Extreme quickness and stellar technique led the lightweight to a second place finish at the Div. 2 South Sectionals...Went on to place fifth at the Div. 2 State Championships and was named an alternate for the All-state competition...Attended off-season camps to improve his skills and did weight training to increase strength...Competes year-round on a club team in Cohasset called Orange Crush...Finneran plays soccer for HHS in the fall and is a member of the AFS club...Is most proud of his performance in the quarterfinals of the Sectionals in which he defeated the Randolph wrestler who eliminated him from the competition last year. Hingham coach Keith Durham: "We felt he would be solid but we never imagined how consistent and dominant he'd be this year. He catapulted far above what we expected. He's a very good offensive wrestler. He's great on his feet and outstanding on top. We expect big things from him next year."

Greg Kahn - Junior
140 - Hingham

Greg Kahn

Had an explosive season for the Harbormen competing in virtually every tournament final...Was second at the Div. 2 South Sectionals and went on to place sixth at the Div. 2 State Championships, just missing a trip to the All-state competition...Won the title at the Belmont tourney and wrestled in the finals of both the Scituate and Cohasset tourneys...A highly aggressive grappler, Kahn set an HHS record for most career pins with ...Racked up 35 wins this season...A Patriot League and Pilgrim Conference 2 All-star, Kahn also competes year-round with the Orange Crush club team out of Cohasset...The junior will be among the team's top returnees next season. Hingham coach Keith Durham: "He had a terrific season. He quickly became one of the most dominant wrestlers at the class. He's tough on his feet and is able to work a pin out of the cradle. He looks to be just as solid next year."

Steve Barry - Sophomore
125 - Scituate

Steve Barry

Emerged as one of the area's top wrestlers this season with a 29-10 season...this after an 8-16 freshman campaign... took sixth at sectionals, but might have finished higher if he didn't injure his neck (he didn't even wrestle in the consolation match) wasn't hurt...had two wins at the Div. 3 state championships a week later, but did not place...Scituate Coach Tom Giacomozzi attributes Steve's improvement to a tremendous commitment to the sport in terms of both athleticism and technique...intends to attend a month long camp in Minnesota this Summer that Giacomozzi compares to boot camp...a wiry grappler who has become particular adept at using his legs to get takedowns ...Pilgrim Conference 2 All-Star...beat Rockland standout Zach Gorman twice this season, including a big win at the Div. 3 sectionals...Coach Giacomozzi: "Stephen has really committed himself to this sport. To go to that camp this Summer really shows you how much. He knows he's not that far from making a run at a sectional and maybe even a state championship, and he's doing everything in his power to get there."

Steve Donovan - Senior
145 - Silver Lake

Steve Donovan

Finished second at Sectionals, losing only to top seeded Ned Beatrice (Newton North) on points in the finals...won one match at the Div. 1 State championships, and was ousted in an overtime loss...posted a final record of 33-7 (25-4 in the regular season)...Old Colony League All-Star...a four year wrestler...played football his first tow years at Silver Lake, but a torn anterior cruciate ligament put an end to that...has narrowed his college choices to UNH or the University of Southern Maine...plan to major in nursing...is not leaning towards wrestlign in college, at least in his freshman year...Silver Lake wrestling coach Andy Kalp: "Steve is a very methodical and deliberate wrestler. He had a couple of pet moves he performed very well and he made real effective use of them."

Chris King - Senior
171 - Silver Lake

Chris King

Completed abbreviated regular season with a perfect 11-0 record for the 20-4-1 Lakers, and did not lose his first match of season until the championship showdown of the Div. 1 south sectionals...went on to finish fourth at the state Div. 1 championships the next week to become the lone Silver Lake wrestler to qualify for All-States...unfortunately, he was unable to attend the event... Old Colony League All-Star...did not get much of a chance to wrestle with the varsity squad until his senior year, as he was stuck behind stars Rich Omar (160 pounds) and Peter Krzyzewski (171 pounds), both 2001 SL grads and Mariner All-Scholastic selections... played football his first two years at Silver Lake... has wrestled at Bay State Games...an Eagle Scout...an avid snowboarder...is leaning towards attending Cape Cod Community College for the next year or two and then transferring to a four year university...probably won't wrestle in college...plans to major in Business Management, as he some day hopes to own his own business ... Silver Lake wrestling coach Andy Kalp: "Chris is hardcore. He has some technical stuff down, but he mostly just wears people down. He's a tough, tough kid."

Matt Lipshutz - Senior
189 - Norwell

Matt Lipshutz

A two-time Mariner all-scholastic selection...his 19-3 regular season earned him the number one seed for the Div. 3 south sectionals...he cleaned up here until he severely sprained his ankle in the championship match against Canton's Josh McKelligan, and wound up withdrawing...the injury also prevented him from wrestling the next week at the State Div. 3 championships...Pilgrim Conference 2 All-Star...had a couple of trademark moves which served him well...utilized the crucifix heavily as a junior and this season perfected a roll... wrestles quite a bit in the off-season, and has attended several camps, including the renowned Orange Crush Summer program... plans to attend the Rochester Institute of Technology, in Rochester, New York, next spring....would like to continue wrestling for that school's Div. 3 program, and has already been in contact with the team's coach to discuss that possibility... Norwell coach Dan Norton: "Dan was probably even or maybe just a little bit above a lot of wrestlers with his technique and strength, but I think it was his endurance and unwillingness to quit that set him apart. He's definitely a warrior."

er Ronan Buick's graduation. Giving the Skippers depth at attack will be soph Mike Devine (three goals) and junior Evan Pestone, who'll also see midfield time, after missing all of last season due to injury.

"There aren't too many teams that have the offensive weapons we put on the field," said Orcutt. "It will be very, very tough to shut us down, because we have so many options. And with the pressure our depth should allow us to put on the other team, it's going to be hard to possess the ball against us."

Midfield Depth

With Cohasset taking the field for the first time on Monday, Orcutt and assistant coach Terry Kahn planned to spend the opening week selecting midfield line combinations. Libby and Matt Davis were both expected to be in the regular line rotation along with senior Sean Chase (six goals, five assists), and junior faceoff specialist Robert Hickey (nine goals, seven assists). Senior Dave Devito (one goal, two assists), who missed most of last season with a hand injury but came on strong in the state tournament as a defensive midfielder, will see action as both a long- and short-stick midfielder. Soph lettermen Mark Davis (one assist) and Mike Hajjar are also in the mix.

New to the team this year – but not to the sport – will be senior Pete Whoriskey, a varsity letter winner in 1999; junior John Durkin, a 2000 letterman; and sophs Rob Carpenter and Mike Rasmussen. Skipper hockey standouts who starred in youth lacrosse. Any of them could step into the regular midfield rotation, as could Pestone. Sophs Dwayne Morris, Mark Donovan and J.T. Oronte, and freshmen Jake Previte and John Grimm could also see midfield action.

"We should be able to run three solid midfield lines for the first time," said Orcutt, who noted that the leadership of 2001 co-captains Buick and Lane Forrer will be tough to replace. "And we'll probably have a fourth, and possibly a fifth line of freshmen and sophomores that we'll use on occasion and for the JV games we expect to schedule."

New-look Defense

On defense, Cohasset lost three senior starters, but the new faces may more than make up for that loss. Junior co-captain Nick Spirito (four goals, one assist), a Bay State Games gold medalist, moves from longstick midfielder to close defense and will be the anchor of the unit. He'll be joined by junior Tom Anderson (16 goals, six assists as a midfielder), sophomore lettermen Stephen Davis and Conor Buick, and junior football/basketball star Ben Lynner. Senior newcomer Chris Caron, soph Dan Roth and freshmen Casey Coleman and Matt Baroudi create depth at the position.

"We'll miss our three graduated seniors, especially Justin Langham's and Greg Figureido's intensity and the physical presence of Geoff McWilliams, a league all-star," said Orcutt. "But Spirito, Anderson and Lynner are exceptional leaders. Add the sophomores into the mix and our skill level should be higher on defense. That will help our clearing and our coverage."

All-Star Goaltending

In goal, the Skippers feature one of the state's best net keepers in co-captain Kyle Weber (six goals, five assists on offense as well). In his first full year as a starter, Weber last year earned first-team all-conference and Bay State Games gold medal honors, and was named to several newspaper all-star teams. He had a solid .649 save percentage during the season, and an amazing .710 percentage during the summer Bay State Games. He'll be backed by soph Nick Murphy, who was 2-0 as a varsity starter a year ago, with freshman Chris Simms expected to gain experience while manning the net for JV contests.

"We're one of a handful of teams whose goalie can win games," says Orcutt. "We don't want to put Kyle into too many situations like that, but it's quite a comfort to know you've got a college-level stopper backing your guys up."

The Skippers have a pre-season scrimmage set for next Tuesday, March 26 at home against 2000 D2 state champ Milton, who Cohasset knocked out of the tourney last spring in a hard-fought 10-8 quarterfinal match-up. The boys open their regular season on Tuesday, April 2 at Tri-Valley League power Hopkinton. The first home game of the season will be on April 9 against Pilgrim League rival Scituate.

"We've got experience and we've got depth," concludes Orcutt, "and that will allow us to develop a work ethic around our commitment to defense. We're going to be known as a team that gives no quarter at either end of the field. But, that said, the final 16 days of the season — when we play eight times, including games against Hingham, Marshfield and two versus Duxbury – will be a real test. If we can pass it, I like our chances in the post-season."

Cohasset's Bell wins NE junior olympic dive crown

Kelsey Bell won gold at the New England Junior Olympic Diving Championships held at Brown University in Rhode Island last weekend.

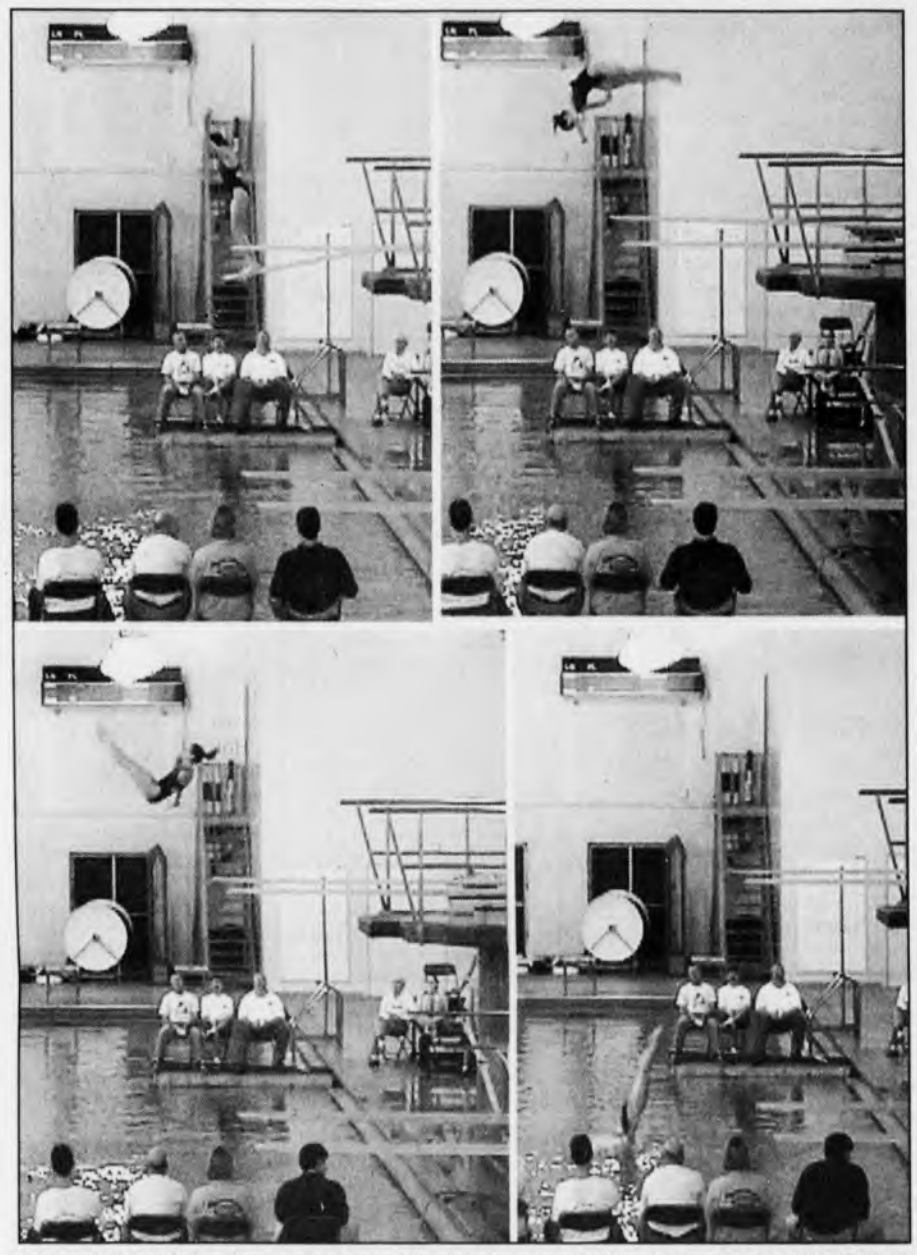
Bell, an eighth-grade student at Cohasset Middle School, placed first in the 1-meter springboard event and first in the 3-meter springboard event in her age division of 13-year-olds-and-under, thus earning her the title of New England Junior Olympic Springboard Diving Champion for her age group.

The competitors performed five dives chosen from the required diving categories, forward, back, reverse, inward and twisting dives and three optional dives, for a total of eight dives on each springboard. Dives were scored by a panel of five judges on technique and degree of difficulty of each dive. Placement order was determined by the total score of all dives completed on the board.

Junior Olympic springboard divers from Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Vermont and Maine were invited to the New England Championships.

Bell has been competing for two years in the U.S. Diving Junior Olympics. She dives four to five days a week with her Junior Olympic Diving Team, Charles River Diving, at Harvard University. She puts in 21/2 hours of practice each night and is focused on working hard, diving her best and winning.

Bell is ranked 20th in the country, a rank she earned at the Junior Olympic Diving Nationals last summer. She is striving to finish in the top six at Junior Olympic Regionals to be held next month, a placement that would qualify her for competing in the Junior Olympic East Nationals this spring.



Cohasset's Kelsey Bell performs a one-and-a-half flip, single twist from the 3 meter board at recent New England Junior Olympic Diving Championships.

Educators attend March 12 seminar

Middle-high school Principal Michael Jones and Health Education Coordinator and co-chairman of the Michael Gill attended an accreditation seminar on March 12 at Mansfield High School.

Sponsored by the Commission on Public Secondary Schools of the New England Association of Schools and Colleges, the program was offered for principals and self-study steering committee members of schools scheduled to be evaluated next fall. The seminar provided information to help schools finalize their plans for the evaluation visit and to learn more about the evaluation report and its review by the Commission on Public Secondary Schools. Participants shared their reactions to the self-study process with members of the Commission staff.

The New England Association of Schools and Colleges, founded in 1885, is the oldest accrediting agency in the country and is recognized by the U.S. Department of Education as a reliable agency to award accreditation in the New England area. The Association is a voluntary accrediting agency of approximately 1,800 public and independent schools, colleges and universities, and vocational, technical and career institutions. Of these, approximately 650 public middle level, K-12 and high schools have been accredited through the Association's Commission on Public Secondary Schools.

In related news, as part of the self-study process, on Wednesday, March 13 the Cohasset Middle-High School faculty reviewed and approved the self-study reports on school resources for learning, and assessment. Additional areas to be reviewed in the coming weeks are leadership and organization, community resources for learning, instruction, and curriculum.

Post-prom party plans underway

Plans are already underway for the post prom party 2002! This is the fifth year of a continuing parent and community effort to give our seniors and their guests a fun, safe, alcohol and drug-free event.

The high school gym will once again be transformed into our "top-secret" theme on prom night May 31. Past years have had the seniors "under the stars", at "Mardi Gras", on a "cruise ship", and "under the Boardwalk." There's dancing, prizes, plenty of food, and all sorts of non-stop activities to help celebrate a memorable night. The party begins right after prom and continues until 5 a.m. Post prom party has been so successful that we've had a 95 to 100 percent attendance rate. The Cohasset Police support the parents and community in their effort to keep the kids safe.

Why not help the tradition grow? The post prom party is truly a gift that the whole community gives our seniors. Become involved...it's fun, creative, you'll meet new people and it's rewarding. For more information contact Jeanne Quigley at 781-383-1573.

CHS Drama club goes for the gold

two shows selected to move on to the New England competition, they're very satisfied with how far they have come.

"We have such a good time together," said Tim Baird, stage manager for the show. "We feel the pressure but it's not cut-throat it anyway."

Holly Dinsmore, who plays Jennifer in the play, thinks that putting on a comedy may help them in the finals.

"I think the judges are ready to laugh after going watching so many dark plays," she said.

Principal Michael Jones said he is thrilled that the club has made it this far.

"We are definitely interested in expanding the program," Jones said. "We're hoping to give it more visibility and attract more students."

This would be welcomed by everyone in the club as many feel the school has not given them the respect they deserve.

"This school prides itself as an arts institution but I don't really see that," Ingber said. "We'd welcome more support from the administration."

Baird said the club is mostly unknown by the students although it's gaining renown.

"I now have kids coming up to me everyday saying they're excited about the show," Baird said. "I think if we keep winning the school will definitely start to pay attention."

The Massachusetts High School Drama Festival began in 1931 and now annually draws about 90 school to its competitions. To enter the Festival, a school must be a member of the guild and the selected play must be approved by the that school's principal. There is also a time restraint on the plays — no productions can exceed a 40 minute time limit which is strictly enforced.

Judges at the Festival will concentrate on two aspects of the play, the production and the acting. Some of the questions the judges are asked to answer concerning the production involve whether there is clear dramatic structure, whether the moods and rhythms of the piece are well established and whether the set contributes to a unified play.

The judges are also instructed to examine such acting aspects like whether the actors are working together to create the world of the play, whether the actors demonstrate commitment, believability and concentration and whether the actors demonstrate controlled physical and vocal work.

Cohasset will perform Friday night, March 22 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $7 and include three plays. Newton Country Day School will perform at 7 and Marblehead High School at 9 p.m.

Performances by other high school finalists take place Thursday evening through Saturday afternoon. The performances are at John Hancock Hall, 180 Berkeley St., Boston.

WORSHIP NEWS

Holy Week service

A Holy Week penance service will be held at St. Anthony Church Tuesday, March 26, at 7:30 p.m. During the service, priests will be available for individual confessions.

The weekly Lenten soup and Stations of the Cross will resume Friday, March 23. The sacrificial meal will be served in the parish center at 6 p.m. and the prayer service will be at 7 in the church.

"Beef and Blarney," the parish's fifth annual Irish social, will be Saturday, March 23, at the parish center. The Rev. John Mulvehill will host the event, which begins at 6 p.m. with a social hour followed by dinner at 7. Entertainment will be provided by the Nevin School Dancers and The O'Reillys. Tickets are $20 (seniors $15) and may be purchased in the parish office from 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. Tables of eight may be reserved.

The Lenten Bible Study series will continue at 7 p.m. Sunday, March 24, in the parish center.

Candlelight service

Saint Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Ave. will celebrate the Great Vigil of Easter, a candlelight service on Saturday, March 30, 7:30 p.m. The worship is dramatic, beginning with the church in darkness. Candles are lit and at the moment when resurrection is proclaimed the lights are turned on signifying that the resurrected Jesus is the light that no amount of darkness can overcome.

Worship Easter morning, Sunday, March 31, will be at 8 a.m. with quartet and brass and 10 a.m. with full choir and brass. Both services, Eucharist with sermon, will be in the church.

Prior to Easter, there will be worship in the church on Maundy Thursday, March 28, at 7:30 p.m. This Eucharist commemorates the last supper and the importance of community for the church's life together in Christ. Following the Eucharist will be a simple meal of foods typical of Jesus' place and time breads, cheese, olives, nuts, fruits, and milk and honey.

A 24-hour, Prayer Watch will begin on Maundy Thursday at 3 p.m. Parishioners sign up for an hour throughout the day to be in church to read, pray, just to be quiet, or meditate. It recalls Jesus' words at Gethsemane, "So, could you not watch with me one hour?" and the words of Psalm 130: "my soul waits for the LORD more than those who watch for the morning, more than those who watch for the morning." It is a powerful experience of prayer each minute throughout the day bringing the church into Good Friday.

Good Friday worship begins at noon on March 29, with an hour of quiet. The Prayer Book liturgy begins at 1 p.m. A service for children takes place at 2:30 p.m. and ends the traditional three hours of worship while Jesus was on the cross. A number of parishioners will participate A the 20 mile Good Friday walk raising money to assist economically poor areas of the south, particularly in rural Mississippi.

Palm Sunday organ recital

As part of its Sunday Concert Series, now in its 11th year, St. Stephen's Church is presenting organist Steven Young in a recital on Palm Sunday, March 24, at 3 p.m. Dr. Young, a graduate of Boston University, is chairman of the Music Department at Bridgewater State College, where he directs the college's choral ensembles. He is also dean of the Southeastern Massachusetts Chapter of the American Guild of Organists. One of Young's claims to fame is his extensive research on the organ works of Louis Vierne, which included living in Paris for a number of months in order to pour over musical scores and perform upon historic instruments.

Works on the Palm Sunday program include those by Sowerby, Commette, Petr Eben, and Rheinberger.

The church is located at 16 Highland Ave., is handicap accessible, and has ample parking in the village car park. There is no admission charge, although donations will be accepted. For more information, call 781-383-1083.

LEGAL NOTICE
Introduction
General Scope of Work

The Town of Cohasset (hereinafter referred to as the "Town") invites proposals from qualified design and engineering firms (hereinafter referred to as the "Consultant") to develop 100% design drawings, specifications and construction bid documents typical of Massachusetts Highway Department 100% design submittals to undertake identified infrastructure and streetscape improvements within the Village business district.

The Town will be undertaking several simultaneous municipal infrastructure improvements within the project limits identified in this RFP. As a result, the Consultant is to develop an implementation strategy that will efficiently combine all fiscal, design and construction resources earmarked for the village environment. This will be done in an overall effort to implement the various projects in concert with one another in order to maximize the resources already in place, and minimize the level of disruption on the community.

In addition, the Consultant is to provide on separate cover a recommended project management approach and fee schedule to administer all oversight responsibilities in relation to project scheduling, construction, and procurement requirements necessary to complete the identified work.

Submission of Proposals

15 copies of the proposal are to be submitted to the Town Manager's Office in the Cohasset Town Hall no later than Thursday, April 25, 2002 at 10:00 a.m. A pre-bid site visit will be held on Thursday, April 4 @ 10:00 a.m. at Cohasset Town Hall.

Questions on this project may be forwarded to Mark W. Haddad, Town Manager at (781) 383-4105.

South Shore stars shine in 'Cabaret'

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Caroline deLima gives a whole new meaning to the show business adage, "There are no small parts, only small actors." The Cohasset-based performer was only a toddler when she made her debut on a South Shore stage.

"My first musical was 'My Fair Lady' at the Hingham Civic Music Theater," deLima recalled by telephone last week. "I was only two years old, and I didn't really have a role. I just kind of strolled through the street scenes." Connections in the cast helped the very youthful thespian land that first role. Her mother, well-known local actress and singer Sarah deLima, played Eliza Doolittle.

The younger deLima is currently tackling a larger, considerably more adult role in the Company Theatre production of the Fred Ebb and John Kander musical, "Cabaret," currently on stage in Norwell. The recent Indiana University graduate plays Sally Bowles, a freewheeling British party girl working as a singer in 1930s Berlin just as the Nazis are coming to power.

Her mother's encouragement and inspiration has led Caroline to pursue acting roles all her life. "I definitely discovered performing through my mother," she says. "My mother really understands that being on stage offers a challenge and a thrill that are simply unparalleled. At the same time, she has always been very up front with me about the difficulties of a life in the theater, which include working mostly nights and for very low pay. Sarah is not only my mother, but also one of my best friends. She has been very generous in sharing with me the lessons she has learned in her career."

Her mother will be in the audience this time around as Caroline portrays a character first made famous by Julie Harris in the 1951 John Van Druten play, 'I Am A Camera," based on Christopher Isherwood's collection of "Berlin Stories."

The best-known Sally Bowles was, of course, the bubbly, appealing one brought to life three decades ago in the Bob Fosse-directed feature film of the musical. The movie swept the 1972 Academy Awards, with Minnelli picking up the Oscar for Best Actress.

More than 35 years after its Broadway premiere, 'Cabaret" continues to prove that it has what it takes to survive, too.

A 1998 Broadway revival, directed by Sam Mendes, presented a darker take on the 1966 original musical. That update won its own hefty share of awards, including a Tony for Natasha Richardson's decidedly unsympathetic Sally.

Thanks to Company Theater directors Zoe Bradford and Jordie Saucerman, South Shore audiences can expect a kind of composite Sally Bowles.

"The recent Broadway Sallys (Richardson, Jennifer Jason Leigh, Kate Shindle, Brooke Shields, Gina Gershon and currently Molly Ringwald) have been riveting, but hard-edged. Zoe and Jordie wanted this Sally to be more likable. Working with Choreographer Sally Ashton Forrest and Music Director Michael Joseph they have incorporated the best elements of the film and Broadway versions into this production," says deLima.

In addition to Broadway standards like

Hingham Library gallery hosts NRAS exhibit

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

The Dolphin Gallery is the first sight to greet visitors in the front-door lobby at the newly renovated Hingham Public Library. The Gallery, named for Hingham benefactors Dr. James A. & Mary Lynd Dolphin, will also display a regular schedule of monthly or semi-monthly art exhibits to go with various donated mementos from the Dolphins, including a vintage model grandfather clock and other permanent fixtures.

The second and current Gallery show since the library's reopening is a collection of recent works covering a range of media by longtime members of the North River Arts Society (NRAS). The show is one of a regular series of members exhibits sponsored by the Marshfield-based artists organization in the local area, and is on view at the library's Dophin Gallery through April 2.

The exhibit, "Recollections," consists of works by NRAS members who have shown their work before at the Hingham Library, in its former exhibit hall Clemons Gallery. Together, the pieces showcase the diversity of styles and perspectives among NRAS artists, with fresh styles and perspectives fitting into the range of conventional media (oil, watercolor) and mostly conventional subjects for landscapes (meadows, marshes, beaches, woodlands) and still lifes (fruits, desk and table objects).

But there are a few exceptions, including Marshfield artist Patricia S. Smith's quilt image of an egret or complementing, multi-colored, mixed media abstracts, "Tapestry I" and "II," by Marcia Ballou also of Marshfield.

Most notable among the unconventional entries are Scituate's Laura Harvey's collection of mixed media pieces, particularly one formed of an old cigar box, chicken wire screen, milk wood sacks, doll heads and other knick knacks that almost dares the viewer to figure out its subject or motif with the title "Why Do You Ask?"

Smith also contributes two other items of the conventional mode, respective oils in still life ("Breakfast") and landscape ("Conservation Land"). Among other landscape pieces, Marshfield's Dorit Flowers displays an impressive feel for Impressionistic style with her series of watercolor images painted in Umbria, Italy — a grape arbor, an old farmhouse and hills.

For fans of bold, striking colors and images, Hull's John

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

Lord of the zings

David Brudnoy
CNC Film Critic

David Brudnoy trains his Gandalf-like mental powers on the Oscars

After all the lesser principalities — Golden Globes, Directors' Guild, People's Choice, and such — have been heard from, the monarch, Oscar, graciously and, we can even if futilely hope, without dawdling too much, bestows its awards. We sing triumphantly if we've read the tea leaves well or hide our heads in shame if we haven't, get into our jammies and crawl into bed, then promptly forget, within at most 48 hours, to whom the Oscars for this or that "went."

The most interesting category this year, for reasons extrinsic to merit but having to do with PC on the one hand and personal pay-back on the other, is the "best performance by an actor" award. Arguably the most impressive performance is by an actor 99 people out of 100 could not identify if he had a sign saying "Oscar nominee" hanging around his neck — Tom Wilkinson as the grieving dad in "In the Bedroom." In the performance he no doubt felt he had to do to be taken seriously and maybe win an Oscar, the ordinarily irritatingly insubstantial Will Smith knocked himself out well as "Ali," while Sean Penn, whose acting is often better than the movies he's in and whose directorial work is superb but seen by nobody, handed in the I'm-handicapped-therefore-I-deserve-to-win award, playing the retarded Sam, as in "I Am...."

But the gladiatorial contest is between two superb actors whom Hollywood doesn't like as persons; they're not likable. Russell Crowe ("A Beautiful Mind") gives vent to his surly gruffness, which in Australia is considered mateyness but outside Down Under is seen as crudeness, and Denzel Washington ("Training Day") is regarded as aloof, disdainful, in his mind better than mere mortals. Hollywood likes its actors cuddly (Tom Cruise) and humble (Jimmy Stewart) and clever (Kevin Spacey), and I could go on but needn't. Crowe and Washington do stupendously in fine films, each deserving of a second Oscar (Washington got his in a supporting role, in "Glory," and Crowe got his for the mediocre "Gladiator" last year), but they're regarded as unclubable, not "our kind," in Hollywood's self-admiring sense of itself.

Moreover, like Halle Berry, stunningly good in "Monster's Ball," Washington's nomination is wrapped up in the old race game. Each year, either "enough" non-white actors are nominated, or the usual self-pitying injustice-collec-

Pan-Fried Fish Fillets

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Fried fish fillets run the gamut from pedestrian to horrible, the coating gummy and tasteless and the fish bland and overcooked. Yet this simple dish cooks in just minutes, takes little preparation, and, when made properly, produces juicy, tender fish encased in a crisp, flavorful coating. What's not to like?

First, the fish. I tested a variety of fillets and found that only the thinnest will do for this recipe. (Thicker fillets such as cod turn out overcooked on the outside and undercooked on the inside.) The best choice turned out to be sole with flounder a distant runner-up. Flounder fillets are a bit too small (about 2 ounces) for this recipe. Sole fillets run 4 to 6 ounces.

The coating consists of three parts: a liquid such as milk or egg, breadcrumbs, and flavorings. I tested egg whites, whole egg, milk, and buttermilk. (The fillets are dipped in the liquid, coated with breadcrumbs, and then pan-fried.) The egg white version was crisp and clean, the milk was good but not quite as clean tasting, the whole egg was too rich, and the buttermilk added a tang that was unwelcome. I also determined that seasoning the fillets directly was preferable to letting the coating do all of the work.

For the breadcrumbs, I tried a flour/cornmeal coating, fresh breadcrumbs, and dry breadcrumbs all of which were fried in an olive oil/ butter combination. The flour/cornmeal was gummy and the least flavorful, the fresh breadcrumbs tasted like a bad church supper stuffing, and the dry breadcrumbs were the crunchiest, adhered well, browned nicely and contributed just the right amount of buttery breadcrumb flavor. Next, I tasted flavor additions to the breadcrumbs. I liked the addition of chopped parsley and/or chives since their flavor complements the breaded fillets. For 1 1/2 cups breadcrumbs (enough for eight fillets) I used 4 tablespoons of chopped fresh herbs. I tried dried thyme but it was overpowering so stick with fresh parsley or chives. Next, I experimented with Parmesan cheese but it simply interfered with the flavor of the fish. Lemon zest was an interesting addition but I quickly found that I needed a lot of zest to get any lemon flavor. When I added enough zest, it then turned bitter so I simply squeezed fresh lemon juice over the fillets after cooking.

Finally, I wanted to confirm the cooking technique. A combination of butter and oil was my first choice but I also tested peanut oil (too much flavor) and canola oil (flavorless and not crispy). Using the butter/olive oil combination and a 12-inch skillet, I found that 8 fillets could be cooked in three batches, 60 to 90 seconds per side. I found that I needed to add an additional tablespoon each of butter and olive oil by the third batch. For best results the heat should be medium-high. If the fish cooks at low heat the fillets become oily and soggy. At high heat the butter burns. These quick-fried fillets are great served with a salad, bread, and glass of wine.

PAN FRIED FISH FILLETS

Note that you should use store-bought dried breadcrumbs, not fresh breadcrumbs. Also, be sure to purchase unflavored crumbs since many brands also include herbs and seasonings.

1 1/2 cups dry, unflavored, store-bought breadcrumbs

1 teaspoon salt plus additional salt for seasoning the fish fillets

1/2 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper plus additional for seasoning the fish fillets

4 tablespoons flat parsley or chives or a combination of both, chopped fine

2 egg whites

8 very thin fish fillets such as sole, about 4 to 6 ounces each

3 tablespoons olive oil

3 tablespoons unsalted butter

Lemon wedges for serving

1. In a shallow bowl or pie plate add the breadcrumbs, salt, pepper, and chopped parsley/chives. Stir with a fork to combine well. Whisk the egg whites in another shallow bowl or pie plate until slightly foamy. Season the fish fillets lightly with salt and pepper. Line a baking sheet with waxed paper.

2. Heat a heavy-duty 12-inch skillet over medium high heat. One at a time dip the fish fillets first into the egg whites and then the breadcrumb mixture. For best results flip the fish a couple of times in the crumbs pressing down to adhere the coating. Set aside in a single layer on the prepared baking sheet.

3. Place two tablespoons each of olive oil and butter in the skillet. Swirl to coat the bottom of the pan. The butter will melt and foam very quickly at this point. Once the butter has stopped foaming place 3 fillets (or as many as you can fit in a single layer), in the skillet. Cook for 60 to 90 seconds or until dark golden brown. With a large spatula turn the fillets and cook on the other side until dark golden brown. Remove and place on a warm platter. Repeat with the rest of the fillets adding the additional tablespoon olive oil and butter before cooking the third batch of fillets. Serve immediately.

Serves four to six.

Kilroy offers oil works including the self-descriptive still life "Days of Wine and Roses" and the inner-cove landscape scene "Winter Harbor." Meanwhile, oil and pastel works by Marshfield's Patricia M. Gray are there for those who prefer a lighter touch. Gray, incidentally, is this year's poster artist for NRAS's annual Festival for the Arts coming this Memorial Day weekend at the society's GAR Hall and surrounding neighborhood in Marshfield.

tors (NAACP, Spike Lee, the liberal white breast-beaters left and their enraged black soul-mates) bellow; and if "enough" don't win, then we endure a latter-day variation on the pouring of ashes on Hollywood's well-coifed heads and the rending of their ludicrously pricey garments, weeping bitter tears of anguish about you-know-which "ism" and making dire threats. Berry, officially (by the melanin-crazed standard of our era) "black," though you have to look closely to notice, deserves an Oscar, but so do Judi Dench for "Iris," Nicole Kidman (for "The Others," for which she wasn't nominated, if not perhaps for "Moulin Rouge," for which she was), Sissy Spacek, as the mourning mother in "In the Bedroom," and even, maybe, Renee Zellweger, in the pleasantly frothy "Bridget Jones's Diary."

More ink has been wasted on trying to psych out the race angle in the voting by the Academy's members than on the merits of films or performances. Below the top two acting categories the work is less contentiously argued, with the supporting actor nominees exhibiting long-suffering affection (Jim Broadbent, "Iris"), exasperated terror (Ethan Hawke, "Training Day"), vileness (Ben Kingsley, "Sexy Beast"), noble virtue (Ian McKellen, "Lord of the Rings") and goofy impersonation (Jon Voight, "Ali"). Among the supporting actresses, take your pick among more long-suffering (Jennifer Connelly, "A Beautiful Mind," and Helen Mirren, "Gosford Park"), acid tonguedness (Maggie Smith, "Gosford Park"), bereftness (Marisa Tomei, "In the Bedroom") and young promise (Kate Winslet, "Iris"). No winner among these would be wrong.

Those of us still awake will press our sniffly noses closer to our TV sets, prop up our eyelids with toothpicks, and await the merciful end of an evening full of Whoopi Goldberg jokes, lugubrious displays of fawningly tawdry, phonily self-effacing acceptance speeches, dopey retrospectives and unwatchable production numbers, as, at last, the big kahuna, the best picture Oscar, is announced. Predictions accompany this story, but ponder the domestic and total box office draw of the five nominees: "Lord of the Rings" ($282 million domestic, $699 total); "A Beautiful Mind" ($129; $131); "Gosford Park" ($27.8; $31.3); "In the Bedroom" ($25; $26); and "Moulin Rouge" ($59.3; $174.6). If you're a bettor, lay odds on a film that makes lots of money, thus encouraging the making of others that'll make lots of money, which will employ many more of the 5,700+ Academy voters or at least those still working, if not those who haven't seen (or been in) a film since "Pride of the Yankees" or known a star since they knew Lillian Gish.

For my people (movie nuts), Oscarfest is Super Bowl-Election Night-New Year's Eve-Mardi Gras all in one. It's ghastly, true, but it's ours. Mock it not. Gandalf is watching you.

Tips for pruning roses, tools of the trade

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Leaving the chilly breezes and the stark silhouettes of the winter landscape behind, I passed through the doorway of the Bayside Exposition Center and stepped into all the glory and splendor of a New England springtime. I eagerly anticipate my annual pilgrimage to the Massachusetts Horticultural Society's New England Spring Flower Show every March knowing that the rebirth of our gardens cannot be far behind.

Hidden treasures were to be found around every corner. Scintillating azaleas in luscious shades of melon, pink and white were artistically blended with exquisite specimens of unusual Japanese maples and handsome hostas. Pretty primroses, dazzling dogwoods, stately delphiniums, frilly ferns, and wonderful woodland wildflowers were just a few of the horticultural delights on display. The sweet perfume of heavenly hyacinths mingled with the fresh scent of pine bark mulch as the captivating sounds of water cascading over rocky waterfalls beckoned visitors to stroll through the magnificent gardens. These wondrous sights and sounds of springtime rekindle the spirit and remind us of the beauty that will be revealed in the weeks to come.

A particularly alluring display of roses in full bloom caused me to pause and ponder the seductive power of their beautiful blossoms. I am tempted each growing season to add a few of these popular shrubs to my landscape but I usually manage to resist their thorny charm when I consider their reputation as high maintenance plants. Bountiful sun, water, fertilizer, winter protection, periodic spraying for pests and diseases and routine pruning make these bushes a time-consuming investment.

The very word, pruning, alone is capable of striking fear in the heart of many a seasoned gardener particularly when it is mentioned in association with rose bushes. For some, there is concern that pruning hurts the plant or that if done improperly it might lead to the plant's demise. Others worry that their prized plant will look unsightly because the cuts were made in the wrong place. Remember that a rose bush is merely another flowering, deciduous shrub that performs best given an annual trim to maintain its shape and promote flowering.

Spring pruning of roses is best initiated while the bushes are still dormant or the buds are beginning to swell. As for most woody plants, begin by removing dead, diseased or crossed branches. Twiggy, spindly growth should be thinned out. To promote a broader, spreading shrub, cut stems back to an outward facing bud. If the rose bush is sparse, encourage some growth inward by trimming a couple of stems to inward facing buds. Many stems are prone to a certain amount of winter dieback, especially in exposed locales, and should be pruned back to healthy tissue.

When and how to prune your roses will vary depending on the type of roses you grow. Hybrid teas, the queen of the roses and usually considered the most demanding, produce their magnificent blooms on new wood. Severe pruning to a foot or less will not harm the plant and will produce a compact bush with large, usually single blossoms throughout the growing season. Select 4 to 5 of the strongest stems and prune off thin, weak growth.

Climbing roses produce long canes ideal for arbors, fences, and trellises. Their blossoms are produced only once or perhaps twice a season on old wood and their stems need little if any pruning except to remove dead or diseased tissue or very old canes. Rambling roses demonstrate similar growth and flowering habits and rarely need to be trimmed unless they require shaping.

The term "shrub rose" has come to encompass a wide array of vigorous growers including those termed old-fashioned, English and species roses. Most of these will form dense shrubs if left unattended but achieve their ultimate flowering and appearance if the branches are thinned out and shortened and if the oldest canes are periodically removed to stimulate new growth. If spent flowers are regularly removed, flowering continues throughout the growing season.

Clean cuts heal faster. To ensure precise pruning, purchase and use proper tools. Quality tools last longer, produce cleaner cuts and make the job easier. Anvil pruners have one sharp blade with an opposing blade that has a flat edge that may crush stems and produce uneven cuts. Bypass pruners work with a scissors-like action with their two blades sliding past one another enabling cleaner, closer cuts. High quality pruners, like the Swiss-made Felco, are worth the additional cost for their durability, precision and the fact that they have replaceable blades. Inexpensive pruners tend to be easily bent out of shape, which may give rise to ragged cuts. Hand pruners are preferred for twigs and smaller branches up to half an inch across. Long-handled lopping shears are useful for cutting larger branches up to 2 inches thick.

Curve-blade pruning saws are usually designed to cut only on the pull-stroke and are ideal for larger branches and great for tight places. Bow saws cut on both the push and pull strokes but require more room to maneuver. Both of these types of saws are available in models with replaceable blades.

For performing the technique of heading back, hedge shears are a necessity. Manual hedge shears may be adequate for small jobs, but electric hedge shears are faster and easier and permit greater accuracy of line while shaping.

Educational Opportunity: Join the experts from the Plymouth County Extension Service for their 25th annual fruit pruning demonstration on Saturday, March 23 at 1 p.m. at 52 Vernon St. in Middleboro to learn how to prune fruit trees, raspberries, grape vines and blueberry bushes. Call the Plymouth County office at (781) 293-3541 for directions.

South Shore stars shine in 'Cabaret'

"Wilkommen," "Money" and the title song, the Company Theatre's veteran creative team has taken its cue from the current Broadway revival and included two songs written for the movie, "Maybe This Time" and "Mein Herr." Also included is "I Don't Care Much," written for a 1987 Broadway revival.

Company Theatre regular John King portrays the enigmatic Emcee, a role that earned both a Tony and Academy Award for Joel Grey. As the show's host, King's character guides audiences through the netherworld of the glitzy, yet decadent Kit Kat Club.

"The Emcee is very cunning and sinister," King pointed out during a telephone interview from his Weymouth home last week. "He has a real dark side that people seem to really enjoy. He is not afraid to do anything."

In the original Broadway production and movie, the Emcee was used as metaphor for Nazi Germany, an asexual, Hitler-like figure. The current Broadway incarnation shows him to be more animalistic, a kind of sexual predator. One constant remains, the Emcee personifies the decadence of the time and place.

King has no plans to wear his character's perhaps nonexistent heart on his nonexistent sleeve. "His evilness isn't blatantly out there, because of the way he is interwoven into the whole show. He is doing what he has to do to survive."

More than 35 years after its Broadway premiere, 'Cabaret" continues to prove that it has what it takes to survive, too.

A great score and the love stories of its two main couples — Sally and Cliff the bisexual American writer and the older landlady Fraulein Schneider and her suitor, the Jewish grocer Herr Schultz — are also reason for its staying power, according to deLima.

"It appeals generationally to a lot of people. There aren't many musicals that even feature an older couple. The show also offers a meaningful kind of social commentary, without hammering it home. The overall message still very much resonates today, especially in these uncertain times."

("Cabaret" will be presented by the Company Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, Norwell, through April 7. For tickets and information, call 781/871-2787.)

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 20

Pluto and the sun share the spotlight today. The planet Pluto, standing at 18-degrees of Sagittarius, begins retrograde travel at 9:53 a.m. The Vernal Equinox arrives at 2:16 p.m., when the sun enters the sign Aries. This is a time for new beginnings, new resolutions. Eliminate the negativity in your life. Free yourself from past traumas, hurts. Forgive others and leave the past behind. The Gemini moon forms major alignments to five planets; the most difficult occurs this evening, when the moon opposes Pluto.

THURSDAY, MARCH 21

This day has its challenges. Take it slow and easy. Postpone acting on decisions, making long-term commitments or signing important documents. The Gemini moon continues active travel until 1:14 p.m. Mercury, the planetary ruler of Gemini, prepares to form a 90-degree contact to Pluto. Choose your words carefully. Casual or insensitive remarks may come back to haunt you. The moon enters the sign Cancer at 7:06 p.m., and the first quarter phase occurs at 9:28 p.m. An applying alignment of Venus and Pluto sets the stage for a romantic evening.

FRIDAY, MARCH 22

Planetary action can make for a stressful day. Keep your mind and hands busy. Develop projects that require mental focus and attention to detail. You may encounter people who are selling an idea or product. Read the fine print. Don't jump into anything. The plus side of today's influences brings an ideal time to do some serious soul-searching, inner spiritual work. You can get to the core of issues and start new programs or disciplines to help you break bad habits. The moon travels in the emotional sign Cancer all day, and the Mercury/Pluto alignment culminates at 2:09 p.m.

SATURDAY, MARCH 23

At 5:19 a.m. the Cancer moon aligns with Venus and becomes inactive for the remainder of the day. No major planetary activity occurs. This is a great day to tackle jobs around the home, especially if it is something you have put off for a while. Clean out the clutter, make repairs or start remodeling jobs. Plan a quiet evening with close friends and family.

SUNDAY, MARCH 24

The moon enters Leo at 12:13 a.m., generating an upbeat mood today and tomorrow. Take a vacation from stress and worry; kick back and enjoy life to the fullest. It is okay to initiate new projects and ideas, particularly before 4:48 p.m., when the moon aligns with Saturn.

MONDAY, MARCH 25

Enthusiasm and optimism continue to run high today. Get an early start because you can be most productive this morning. It is best to begin new projects before 12:41 p.m., when the moon aligns with Venus. The morning is also favorable for working with others, launching sales and promotion campaigns. At 8:57 p.m. the moon opposes Uranus and becomes inactive.

TUESDAY, MARCH 26

A full moon is building and will culminate Thursday, generating high energy this week. The moon enters Virgo at 1:44 a.m., remaining there today and tomorrow. Don't get caught up in worries, self-doubts. Instead, take on a busy work schedule. Clean out, reorganize; get your life in order.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 27

Yesterday's planetary influences affect today as well. A 90-degree alignment of the sun and Jupiter culminates at 8:24 am. Don't be too hasty in your judgments or too keen to commit yourself. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action for a few days. Zero in on jobs you have been putting off and get them out of the way. The Virgo moon opposes Mercury at 8:31 p.m. and becomes inactive.

Ledge, runway lawsuit, community preservation

Town Meeting has a full plate

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

With Town Meeting looming ahead, residents are preparing to vote on a range of issues from stopping a proposed runway that would send hundreds of jets over Cohasset to protecting the town's prominent outcroppings of ledge.

Voters will also tackle whether Cohasset should reinstating the "use variance" in the zoning bylaw.

Several other potentially hot issues include accessory dwellings and how the town should spend money under the Community Preservation Act, voters adopted last year.

The annual Town Meeting will be held from 10 a.m.-5 p.m. in the Sullivan gymnasium at the middle-high school on Saturday. Town Moderator George Marlette, who is celebrating his 10th year as town moderator, said he expects the meeting to conclude on time.

"I certainly think everything can be resolved in one session," he said. Marlette added that there will be a one hour lunch break from 1-2 p.m. A quorum of at least 100 people is required before the meeting can get underway.

"For our first Town Meeting I think we have some pretty solid proposals."

— Selectman Tom Callahan on community preservation proposals

One significant change in this year's Town Meeting is that for the first time in its history, a citizen, rather than a representative from a church, will be giving the invocation. Herbert Towle, 91 S. Main St., will be the first resident of the town to deliver the prayer.

"I have tremendous respect for him," Marlette said. "He's one of the oldest and most faithful attendees of Town Meeting, he is Mr. Town Meeting."

Marlette said that after ten years all clergy leaders have had a chance to deliver the invocation and he wanted to start sharing the honor among distinguished citizens in the community.

While there isn't one particular issue that is expected to bring people into the Sullivan gymnasium, there are a plethora of special interest articles that could have reverberating effects on town.

From the spending of $30,000 for a runway lawsuit against Massport, the protection of ledge in town, to how the Community Preservation Committee should spend its money — Town Meeting should generate plenty of debate.

"Originally, there were a lot of major articles on the warrant that have now been removed," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "But there are still a lot of important issues out there."

There were three articles generating a lot of discussion before Town Meeting that are no longer on the warrant. One was an underground utility article, another would have allowed the town to sell water to Mass American and the third could have set the stage for the expansion of Cohasset Plaza.

However, there are still plenty of articles on the warrant that are sure to generate debate.

One complex issue at Town Meeting involves a use variance bylaw. This year's article would reinstate the Zoning Board's ability to grant use variances under

Marlette closes in on first decade

By Mary Ford

George Marlette feels as passionately about Town Meeting as he did a decade ago when he first took over the gavel of the venerable Cohasset institution.

Neither controversy about, nor criticism of the legislative body over which he presides, has managed to dim the enthusiasm of Marlette — who at the ripe old age of 41 — is still likely one of the youngest town moderators around.

Saturday he'll stand at the podium for his 10th annual Town Meeting as the elected moderator and unopposed for reelection, it's expected Marlette will easily win a fourth term a week later at the April 6 Town Election.

For the attorney whose private practice concentrates on probate issues, it's been an interesting journey — one in which his vision of running an efficient,

For the parents of American soldiers, an immense pride coupled with a nagging concern for their child's welfare is never far from their hearts and minds.

Most of the time, these parents and loved ones go about their day-to-day activities quietly without fanfare. Even their neighbors may not know they have a son or daughter in the service. And few people, apart from veterans and their families, may understand the nervousness these parents harbor that surfaces with each new headline or news report about the U.S. war on terrorism.

But the George H. Mealy American Legion Post 118 in Cohasset and Hingham VFW Post 6053 don't want soldiers' families to feel alone. To that end the veterans organizations have joined the national movement to bring back the Blue Star Flag that has a long history.

Novice bagpiper to march in NYC

SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

When he first took up the bagpipes, Michael McWilliams knew he faced a steep learning curve. What made it especially daunting was the knowledge that most people start the process a lot younger.

"A determined kid could probably blow right through the rank beginner stuff in several months," says the 50-year-old Cohasset resident.

"It's taken me longer, and for a while there, I think the neighbors were really suffering," he says. "But I'm now at the point where I can actually make some music instead of the awful squeals, groans and squawks I was producing a while ago."

He may not be headed for a bagpiping championship anytime soon, but McWilliams is preparing to put his nascent piping skills to a very public test. On April 6 he will be in New York City to join bagpipers and drummers from all over the globe as they attempt to set a world record in the Tunes of Glory March (wwww.pipefest.com). With a goal of attracting 10,000 kilted marchers, the event will raise funds for Cancer research in the UK and the US while honoring the victims and heroes of the September 11 World Trade Center attacks. Runway fight, sewer split board

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Selectmen are divided on whether the town should appropriate money for the Little Harbor sewer project and the lawsuit to fight the runway at Logan Airport.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said installing sewers should take priority over the Little Leagues fields, for example.

"While the fields may be nice they're not essential," McMorris said. "We need to take a hard look at what we're asking the taxpayers to pay for."

Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed who said he wanted to stop procrastinating on the issue.

"This is the next phase of the project," he said. "Let's get this underway."

But Selectman Michael Sullivan said wasn't necessary to spend money on a project that wouldn't see construction until 2007.

"We need to take a hard look at what we're asking the taxpayers to pay for."
— Selectman Ronnie McMorris

"Why would we spend money on this now?" he asked. "I think it's a waste of money."

Selectman Merle Brown felt the town needed to slow down on spending so much money and felt a comprehensive plan to sewer the entire town would better serve residents.

"I want to try and solve everyone's problems," Brown said. "I don't think every time someone runs in here for money we should give it to them." The board voted 3-2 not to recommend the sewer appropriation.

In another split vote, selectmen decided to not recommend the article asking for $30,000 to fight the runway.

Sullivan didn't want to jump into a lawsuit in which he didn't see and end in sight.

"I can't see this suit as a definite win for Cohasset," he said. "I'm just not sure what it's really accomplishing."

Selectman Tom Callahan worried the lawsuit could be a "black hole" in which the town throws money into for years.

"This is not just $30,000, it's an unlimited amount in the future," Callahan said. "I don't think this is the right lawsuit to be involved with."

However, Koed said if the board didn't take action now, it could be paying for it in the future.

"In five to 10 years, when there are twice as many planes flying over the townspeople will be asking why the selectmen didn't take action on this when they had the chance."

This week in COHASSET

Open Space Committee, April 2, 7:30 p.m.

School Building Committee, April 8, 6 p.m.

School Committee, April 3, 7:30 p.m. at the middle high school library.

Zoning Board of Appeals, April 22, 7:30 p.m.

All meetings are at Town Hall unless otherwise noted.

New vests

The Cohasset Police Department received 21 new bullet-proof vests this week, according to Chief Bob Jackson. The vests were funded by state and federal grants and cost the town nothing.

"These vests offer a lot more protection," Jackson said. "They also have half of the weight of our old ones."

Jackson added the department has had the same vests for almost seven years and it was time for an upgrade. He said the old jackets will be declared surplus and donated to the U.S. Army.

Memorial planned

John Kimball, resident of Doane Street, is planning to buy a bench and dedicate it to Jesse Sargent, the Cohasset youth who passed away last week. According to Town Manager Mark Haddad, the bench will be placed at the Beechwood ball fields, a place Jesse frequently visited. The money for the bench will be raised privately.

Clock ticking

Residents will finally be able to tell the time when driving past the First Parish Church on N. Main Street. Town Manager Mark Haddad extended a public "thank you" to Francis Collin, of S. Main Street, and Noel Ripley, also of S. Main Street, for fixing the clock.

Correction

A previous Mariner story stated the Community Preservation Committee was recommending $165,000 for the preservation of two of the Cohasset Historical Society's buildings. The actual amount is $150,000.

School projects

Supt. Ted Malvey said he finally felt comfortable enough in the progress of the two school projects to predict completion dates. He estimated that the Deer Hill School should be completed by December 2002 and the middle high school should be finished by December 2003. He said although the efforts are going extremely well, the next couple months are crucial.

"The summer months are very critical to the project," he said. "That's when a lot of work will get done inside the buildings."

Malvey said it's possible that the third grade could make the leap from the Osgood School to the Deer Hill School and the sixth grade could jump for the Deer Hill School to the high school in February of 2004.

Baby-sitting

Girl Scout Cadet Troop 4778 will be providing baby-sitting services for children whose parents wish to attend Town Meeting on March 30. There will be two rooms available at the high school and no more than 25 kids will be allowed in the rooms per hour. No more than five children who are under three-years-old will be allowed per hour. Parents are encouraged to supply snacks and toys and there be a television and VCR available if parents wish to bring their child's favorite movie.

The baby-sitting will be available on a first-come, first-serve basis and residents are encouraged to contact Colleen Richardson at 781-383-0998 for reservations. The service will be provided from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

certain stringent conditions. A use variance would allow a use in a particular district that is otherwise prohibited. The exception would be a sanitary landfill use within the water resource district.

"This would essentially give the power to five people (on the ZBA) to control the use variances," said Al Moore, chairman of the Planning Board.

Resolution of this issue is critical to the Mill River Marine Project. The project, which involves the restoration of the old boatyard off Border Street, would need to construct two residential units on the site to make it financially viable. Housing in the waterfront business district would require a use variance.

"This project needs a tremendous amount of work and the only way to finance it would be with those two units," said Charles Humphreys, attorney for the proponents of the project. "The ability to restore the boatyard is completely dependant on being able to obtain a use variance."

Voters at Town Meeting will also have a say on the inaugural Community Preservation Committee article which asks to appropriate money for three projects.

With the money earned from a 1.5 percent real estate tax surcharge and state matching funds, the CPC will recommend spending $150,000 for improvements to the historical society museums; $100,000 for the construction of two new ball fields at the gravel pits; and $60,000 for 15 years toward the purchase three lots off Beach Street.

Each appropriation will be voted on separately because two of them, the ball fields and historical society's proposals need a majority vote since they concern an appropriation of cash, and one of them, the Beach Street proposal, needs a two-thirds vote because it involves borrowing.

Selectman Tom Callahan, the board's liaison to the CPC, said it was a trying process to figure out how to spend the money.

"We got organized late in the game," Callahan said. "But for our first Town Meeting I think we have some pretty solid proposals."

Of the three articles the CPC has made recommendations on, Callahan thinks the one concerning the three lots on Beach Street will garner the most discussion.

The money, which would be approximately $610,000 if it were to be bonded now, would be spent to help a group of concerned residents buy three lots off of Beach Street. The lots are estimated to be worth upwards of $1.2 million, the group's estimate — to three times that much by the lots' owners.

"People need to look objectively at this article," Callahan said. "This is not only to benefit a few people on Beach Street, but everyone in town who would enjoy a large area of open space."

Another article that deals with the preservation of Cohasset's natural beauty is a ledge preservation article. This is the second year in a row proponents of the issue have brought this article to the attention of Town Meeting but this year, there are two main differences.

This proposed bylaw amendment would require a special permit, as opposed to a variance, from the Zoning Board before ledge a minimum of eight feet in height could be altered. The Zoning Board would have to find that altering ledge would be "substantially detrimental" to the character of the area to deny a special permit.

The second major change is that this year, the article has the support of the Planning Board.

"The problem with the article last year was that it was hastily thrown together and was significantly flawed," said Planning Board Chairman Al Moore. "This time around we had plenty of time to work with it and think the people will be able to vote on a solid article."

If residents are concerned with the constant noise from jets circling overhead, or residue collecting on patio furniture, Town Meeting will provide an outlet to express their discontent.

An article on the warrant asks residents to approve the appropriation of $30,000 to join a lawsuit headed up by Hull and joined by Revere and Hingham. The lawsuit states the Environmental Impact Report that Massport and the FAA released has false and misleading statements and should be thrown out.

Proponents of the issue contend that if Massport and Logan are able to go through with runway 14/32, residents could experience more than 250 flights a day over the town. However, selectmen did not support the article because the board was worried the town may be entering a black hole by engaging in the suit.

"Cohasset has become the crossroads for airplanes arriving at and departing Logan," said Ralph Dormitzer, proponent of the issue. "To protect our quality of life, I encourage everyone to vote 'yes' on the article."

The town has already spent the $30,000 that was appropriated at last year's annual Town Meeting for a review of the environmental impact report on the proposed runway which as become the basis for the lawsuit. At special Town Meeting in November residents voted down a similar proposal for $30,000 to fight the runway.

Town Meeting will be Saturday, March 30 at 10 a.m. and is expected to last till 5 p.m. with a one-hour lunch break.

Sewer board back pedals on override

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The Sewer Commission decided banking on an override in the current economic climate was anything but a sure thing.

So the commission has come up with a different plan to set the stage for installing sewers around Little Harbor and along Atlantic Avenue – a plan the town can fit into its budget without seeking a debt exclusion vote at the polls April 6.

The commission is no longer asking for $750,000 but $180,000 toward preliminary engineering study for installing sewers in the Little Harbor area. The entire project is expected to cost approximately $10 million

"Considering the current economic state the town is in we thought asking residents for an override was pretty undesirable," chairman Gary Vanderweil said. "We didn't feel it was responsible of us to seek all that money."

The debt exclusion question will still appear on the ballot, but the issue is moot. Voters don't need to approve the ballot question for the $180,000 to be appropriated, Town Meeting is expected to take care of that.

Lowering the monetary request it will delay the project.

"We'll be back asking for more money," Vanderweil said. "This will probably delay the project about a year."

The original $750,000 would have been used for a complete engineering study which would have included construction documents that were fully detailed and ready to go out for bid. The reduced amount of money will be used to detail a full layout of the all the piping infrastructure in town as well as all the connecting points for residents.

"This will be very useful to all homeowners," Vanderweil said. The sewering project hopes to connect almost 300 homes to the system.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the $180,000 could be spent without raising taxes. He said the town felt it still needed to ask Town Meeting for a portion of money to prove to the state it's working resolving its wastewater problems. The town is currently under a state court order to come up with a comprehensive solution for the entire town.

"We are looking at ways to comply with the state," Haddad said. "We're going to see if we can renegotiate the deal to get some more time to work on sewering."

About two weeks ago, selectmen informed the Sewer Commission that $750,000 would be impossible to include in the budget without an override.

Selectman Tom Callahan said while he's still not thrilled with the new proposal, he's glad there is not an override.

"If it's something we can do now and still benefit from that, it's fine by me," Callahan said.

Hingham water sale on hold for time being

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The proposed sale of Cohasset water to Hingham won't be on the Town Meeting agenda after all.

Commissioners Glenn Pratt and John McNabb informed selectmen Tuesday problems in negotiations with Mass-American Water Company have put the sale on hold.

"All of our articles were tied into this one situation," Pratt said. "We felt if we couldn't feasibly do it, there was no sense asking the town to support it."

Pratt added that the articles relating to the sale could be back at a future Town Meeting.

Mass-American, which serves Hingham, Hull and about 320 homes in North Cohasset is exploring buying 500,000 gallons of water a day from Cohasset. The sale would need the approval of Town Meeting.

The one article that the Water Commission still has on the warrant involves borrowing $2 million for needed water system capital improvements to be repaid from water department revenue.

The money will be used for a variety of improvements to both the plant and pipe lines throughout town.

"The purpose of this article is to allow certain plant improvements and continue our watershed protection activities," the commission states in an information sheet. "While our on-going distribution system improvement program has improved our fire fighting capacity in many areas, we are still relatively deficient in others.'

George Marlette closes in on first decade

modern Town Meeting has evolved.

"Many don't realize the town has branches of government," says Marlette referring to Town Meeting as the legislative arm and the selectmen's office as the executive branch.

"Town Meeting adopts laws, spends money and tackles some very significant issues," he says.

Marlette, who is also a student of history of the position he holds, describes Town Meetings of the past as "wild west" events — when there were few rules and a ton of old-fashioned practices including letting speakers talk as long as they wanted.

In the days before microphones, motions were repeated in order that everyone in the hall could hear them. That antiquated practice continued into modern times until Marlette checked with Town Counsel and learned he could dispense with time-consuming repetition.

"Brevity and clarity" are two words that Marlette hopes are the hallmarks of his tenure at the helm of Town Meeting.

He is constantly thinking of ways to retool Town Meeting to make the oft-complex issues that appear in the form of articles on the warrant more accessible. He's the first to admit the middle-high school Sullivan gymnasium has lousy acoustics and is not user-friendly when it comes to presentations. There's nothing worse than a crowd of 300 trying to view a slide presentation on a small screen or projected onto a wall where the image is blurred. The sound system can be problematic and lighting isn't always ideal — and that's not to mention uncomfortable seating especially for those in the bleachers who endure hours on a hard, wooden bench with no back support.

But once the middle-high school is virtually rebuilt — thanks to the generosity of a prior Town Meeting and subsequent debt exclusion override at the polls — Town Meeting "digs" will no doubt be more state-of-the-art. Marlette also foresees the computer playing a crucial role in Town Meetings in the future.

"We can complete bank transactions over the Web," he says. "It's not too far fetched to consider voting that way."

In addition to eliminating the second reading of a motion, Marlette has also succeeded in getting more information in the hands of the voters. Key committees are encouraged to have copies of reports available to the voters as they enter the hall, so they have them in their hands to refer to during the discussion.

Town Meeting voters also receive the latest proposed motions that may differ from those in the warrant, which is printed weeks earlier. The handouts indicate which articles will be postponed, if there are changes in monetary figures, and if there were any Scribner's errors in the original version in the warrant.

Rules and procedures of Town Meeting are included in the warrant, which also spells out how long people are allowed to speak on an issue.

Town Moderator George Marlette has been at helm of Town Meeting for 10 years.

Under Marlette's watch, Town Meeting has appropriated money for a new DPW garage, Alumni Field at the high school, a new elementary school, renovations and additions to the middle-high and Deer Hill schools, a new library, two sewer projects and upgrading the town's water distribution system.

"These projects were solidly rooted in Town Meeting," he says.

Despite the fact the town has some 5,000 registered voters with only a handful, comparatively speaking, attending Town Meeting, Marlette is still convinced the open Town Meeting works.

"People in towns with a representative form of government [mayor and city council, or representative Town Meeting] get more detached," he says. "People get far more disconnected."

For Marlette — it's the quality not the quantity in terms of attendance — that really matters. He has no problem with those who come only to vote on particular issues and then head home, leaving the balance of the business up to the stalwart few.

"I look at the quality of the decisions that come out of Town Meeting," he says. "I look at the results.

"Town Meeting has made a lot of good decisions."

He points out that sometimes, as was with the proposal for Forest Avenue sidewalks years back, a good project gets shot down but surfaces again in a subsequent Town Meeting that approves it.

"The sidewalks were referred to a committee for study," he recalls. "The first time out, it just wasn't the right time." [The project was approved last fall].

Marlette doesn't agree with critics who say Town Meetings are stacked with special interest groups who force their own agenda. He points out Town Meeting is a "two-way street" and opponents also have the ability to muster forces to oppose an article.

While Marlette allows resolutions from the floor of Town Meeting honoring recent retirees or long-time volunteers, he did away with the practice of allowing resolutions from the floor of Town Meeting on issues.

In years past, it was often the practice to "get the sense of Town Meeting" by asking for a vote on an issue that was not on the warrant — such as whether the train should come to town of whether voters favor the "buck a bag" program. Marlette feels the place for true referendum on issues is at the ballot box.

While Marlette says a trip to Town Meeting should be a required part of any civics or government class at the middle-high school, the only true way to get young people hooked is by attracting their parents to the forum, he said.

30,000 children in Massachusetts were abused or neglected last year.

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

HAPPY EASTER

Hello Cohasset! I am not even going to mention the weather except to say, I know it is going to warm up soon.(wishful thinking, maybe) I want to wish everyone a very, happy Easter this weekend. The Easter Bunny has been very busy getting eggs together and the baskets are ready and waiting.

SURVIVING SURVIVOR

Have any of you been following Survivor? Kathy started out with a bang and I actually thought she might be voted out last week but she managed to pull through to this week's showing. I really wonder how far she will go, she is strong and very vocal, one can only wonder...

RETIREMENT PARTY

As many of you know, Cohasset is losing many fine employees this spring and the Department of Public Works is getting ready to say goodbye to Harold W. Litchfield. Harold has been in his position for many years and has been the backbone of this department for so long that it is hard to imagine him gone. We know he will remain busy with his family and paving business and his many enjoyable trips to New Hampshire. A retirement party has been planned for Harold and this is the time for all of us to come and wish him all the best. The party is being held on Friday, May 10 at The Golden Rooster Restaurant in North Scituate. Cocktails and hors d'oeuvres will be served from 6:30-7:30 p.m. with dinner to follow. The evening will end off with music and dancing and is going to be a night to remember for Harold. Tickets are available by calling Peggy Litchfield at 781-923-1080 and are at a very reasonable $30 per person. Make sure to make your ticket orders early as they will go quite fast and when they are gone, well, you know they are gone! Tickets will be on sale through Monday, May 6.

The town welcomes Mr. Carl Sestito as the new superintendent of the department. Carl has been an employee for many years and has worked hand in hand with Harold for quite some time. I know that Carl has the support and knowledge to keep the department running in the same manner as it was by Harold. Congratulations Carl!

AN INSPIRATION

Jan Phillips, an award-winning author, photographer, musician and inspirational speaker, returns to Cohasset to lead an all day workshop entitled "From Creation to Transformation-How Our Creative Works Heal The World". The fee is $85 and registration may be made by calling the Second Congregational Church at 781-383-0345 or stop by the office between the hours of 9a.m.-1p.m., Mon.-Fri.

Blue Star flags fly for local soldiers

date back to World War I and feature a blue star on white background with a red border. They are placed in a window or other location where they can be seen as a reminder that the house is "home" to a soldier in the reserves or on active duty who either is, or could be called in harm's way at any time.

At first, Kathy Ford of Hingham wasn't sure what the banner meant when Pete Shaw of the VFW gave her one. Her son, Army Pvt. Lawrence M. Gillette, 21, is stationed at Ft. Drum, N.Y. with the elite 10th Mountain Division.

But she soon put up the banner near the American flag and yellow ribbon on her house.

"Of course I'm nervous," Ford says. "Larry is my son." But she quickly adds, Larry, who signed up last May, is doing what he wants to do.

"He's very gung-ho and patriotic," she says. "He's proud to be an American."

JoAnna Hamilton of Beechwood Street in Cohasset says her brother, Corp. Andrew Hamilton, who is in the U.S. Marine Corps reserves, was always patriotic.

"It's part of the family," she says. "My father was in the army for 27 years and my brother Edward was on active duty for four years." Her parents, Frank and Jane Hamilton, have the Blue Star Flag in the window.

Joseph Mortland III, son of Joseph Jr. and Gerry Mortland of Fort Hill Street in Hingham, who serves in the Army National Guard was called up in December and is now at Ft. Bragg, N.C. Sgt. 1st Class Mortland, 53, a Hingham fire captain who is now serving as a master mechanic on Chinook helicopters, had to leave his wife and 15-year-old daughter at home in Weymouth.

"The world should know of those who give so much for liberty. The dearest thing in all the world to a father and mother is their children."

— Congressional Record, 1917

Gerry Mortland, who put the flag in a bay window, says she recalls when Blue Star banners were a common sight during World War II.

"They were pretty prevalent," she recalled. "Almost anyone who had a boy or husband in the service had one." She feels the banners are a nice gesture and help keep the fact that men and women are serving their country in these difficult times at the forefront of people's minds.

"We can get a tiny bit blasé about these things," she says.

In Cohasset, Robert and Diane Jackson of Ash Street, whose son Keith Jackson is a hospital corpsman 3rd Class in the U.S. Navy, also have a Blue Star Flag on display.

Also known as the Service Flag, the blue stands for hope and pride..

The George H. Mealy American Legion Post 118 is offering Blue Star banners to Cohasset parents with sons and/or daughters currently serving in the reserves or on active duty with the armed forces. To receive yours, call the legion, at 781-383-9657.

Post Commander Steve Wigmore hopes when people see the banners they will stop and reflect, and appreciate those who are serving their country.

"September 11 brought us together," he says. "We should have been doing this all along.

"We can't sit back and relax like we did when the Trade Center was bombed the first time — Sept. 11 was a wake-up call."

Town Meeting

When a Cohasset friend stopped by the office this week, we asked her if she planned to attend Town Meeting and what she thought about "use variances."

She replied she thought Cohasset Plaza needed one to expand.

But Plaza owner Don Staszko has withdrawn the citizens' petition article that would have set the stage for expansion of the plaza — an article that had nothing to do with use variances.

We point this out because if there ever was a Town Meeting you should attend — it's the one on Saturday.

The articles — or items of business — are highly complex and confusing, but could have a profound effect on Cohasset.

We've covered use variances, accessory dwellings, ledge preservation, the proposed Logan runway, community preservation, selling water to Hingham, Little League fields at the gravel pits and so on, over the past few months.

And still, we find we have to refer back to what we wrote to keep from getting confused.

There's no place like the floor of Town Meeting to elucidate matters. It's the perfect forum to hear a presentation and then listen to arguments, both pro and con from the floor.

Often some, who come with their minds made up, vote the opposite way they expected to after listening to both sides of an issue.

Is preserving ledge a neighborhood matter for those who don't want to see more Beach Street development or a bylaw that would preserve a natural feature that makes Cohasset unique?

Would reinstating the ability for the Zoning Board to grant use variances give too much power to an appointed board? Or could a use variance save projects that may have merit such as the restoration of the Mill River Marine Railway off Border Street?

Is the proposed Accessory Dwelling bylaw a valid mechanism to create more affordable housing in town — or just so much red tape?

Should the town commit more money to fight the proposed new Logan runway or would the legal fund become a bottomless pit? And is the expenditure worth it, considering the potential impacts overhead?

The Community Preservation Committee is recommending expenditures for three projects, including borrowing money to buy lots off Beach Street that would add to open space in town. Is this the way you want to see part of the town's new nest egg spent?

Do you want to spend $180,000 to get the ball rolling on what would be the town's third major sewer project?

If you care about any of these issues, and there are others too, then you must attend Saturday's Town Meeting. If nothing else, it will be an education. But more importantly, you'll leave with a clear picture of what the important — albeit highly complex — issues are before the town, and would have had a voice in how they are addressed.

As Town Moderator George Marlette said this week, it's not the quantity of attendees but the quality that counts. In the end, Town Meeting usually makes a thoughtful decision.

Don't you want to be part of the process? Don't you want to make a difference and be part of that "quality group"?

Then put your other matters aside Saturday and attend Town Meeting.

We'll see you there.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Full picture on Hagerty proposal

TO THE EDITOR:

Although it is true that the Board of Selectmen expressed disappointment in the presentation of progress made to date concerning the effort to establish a coastal research and classroom facility at the Hagerty building, the article in last week's Mariner failed to fully report the extent of work completed to date. The following list of accomplishments was presented to the selectmen and to the Mariner on the evening of March 19:

• We have worked with students in preparing final drafts of harbor study reports to be presented to the Board of Health in May. We have convened students, teachers, town officials, and scientific consultants for three meetings at TPMC to work on these reports. This represents our model in action — collecting, analyzing, reporting, and presenting quality data to the town. This is the primary purpose of utilizing the Hagerty building as an educational facility.

• We have submitted a $5,000 grant proposal to the EPA for water quality analysis in the Gulf River, to be conducted by students this summer. EPA informs us that we have passed internal and external proposal reviews, and that a recommendation for funding has been forwarded to the regional administrator. I have been informed, however, that the regional administrator has final approval.

• We have submitted a $20,000.00 grant proposal to CZM to:

1. provide for the design and construction of the first public toilet facilities at Mariner's Park.
2. provide for the design and construction of handicap access to the public toilet facility and to the Hagerty building
3. provide design plans for utilizing the Hagerty building as a public center for arts and environmental science education
4. provide for the production of publicity materials to both advertise to the general public that such a center exists and to utilize such materials to leverage foundation support for our continued growth.

• We have secured a donation of 12 high speed computers and workstations and office furniture from Apto Solutions.)

• We have submitted a $20,000 grant proposal to the Massachusetts Service Learning Corporation requesting funds to create an after school GIS training program. This program will teach students skills necessary to help the town update its digital data base. This grant was the product of several email correspondences with Growth and Development Committee members, Planning Board members, town planner Liz Harrington, and GIS specialist Jeff Donze, all of whom enthusiastically endorsed our proposal. It was clear to all that this proposal called for the program to operate out of the Hagerty building.

• We submitted a $2,500 grant to the New England Grassroots Fund for support to wire the building for high speed computer connections. Our proposal was rejected as Grassroots funders were not focusing on technology initiatives in this round. We were invited to revise and submit a proposal next round in April.

• We have requested support from the Cohasset Educational Foundation for purchase of lab equipment to run summer research projects out of the Hagerty building.

• We have written, produced, and distributed Summer Institute course catalogues and are in the process of making middle and high school students aware of the opportunities to conduct meaningful research for the town of Cohasset.

• We have pursued talks with the South Shore Art Center to discuss possibilities of collaboration at the site. • We have met with various other groups and individuals in pursuit of leads, partnerships, financing models and funding sources, but have no concrete results to report (at this time); we mention(ed) this only as evidence of our good faith initiatives.

We've accomplished much in five months. We will soon know if we have been successful in our grant applications and if so, we will be in a fairly good position to carry our initiative forward.

As a closing note, I would like to remind the board that the town's master plan initiative has yielded important information about what the townspeople value about Cohasset and want to preserve. The issue of protecting water resources seems to be high on everyone's list and wording to that effect is presently found in the draft vision statement of the master plan. While it's recognized that our proposal to establish an environmental research center at the Hagerty building is no guarantee that Cohasset's water resources will be affected one way or another, it is posited that protecting and promoting the value of the community's water resources requires a sustained community effort to provide the facilities and programs to make it happen.

Questions about spending CPA funds

TO THE EDITOR:

Last year the residents of Cohasset voted to accept the Community Preservation Act. So far this year I am not quite sure as to the purpose of this act. Am I the only one to believe that the purpose of adopting this act was to be like a savings account that we could utilize when something out of the ordinary required funding? This year a Community Preservation Committee was appointed and have submitted its suggestion for the utilization of this fund. It greatly disturbs me that this committee suggested how we can use these funds for not only next year but for the next 15 years.

The following is some information pertaining to Chapter 267 of the Acts of 2000, (Community Preservation) which can be found on the internet. I can not recall this information being conveyed during the adoption of this CPA but I could have been "asleep at the wheel". If it was conveyed before, allow this to be a refresher in understanding what reimbursement the town will actually be receiving?

As far as the state commissioner's distribution goes the first round is only 80 percent of the total revenues, collected by the state for this fund, to be distributed to each city or town that has applied and has been accepted for this CPTF (Community Preservation Trust Fund). The state revenues being collected for this fund are estimated to be approximately $25 million annually. A percentage of these revenues will be determined by the state commissioner in an amount not less than 5 percent but not greater than 100 percent of the total amount raised by the city or town's tax surcharge on real property. How many cities and towns will be sharing this fund?

In the second round, the remaining 20 percent of the fund, known as the equity distribution, shall be determined by the state commissioner using a ranking system. The rank is determined by the state commissioner based on valuation per capita and population and dividing the sum by two. This gives the CP raw score. There is some understanding that this 20 percent will be distributed among only the cities and towns that have adopted the maximum 3 percent surcharge.

If there are any revenues remaining after the second round distributions and any necessary administrative expenses have been paid, the state commissioner may conduct a third-round surplus distribution. Just where does this leave Cohasset based on the fact that we have 1.5 percent surcharge, high valuation and low population? Also keep in mind that CPA remains in effect for a minimum of five years, after that it can be revoked in the same manner that it was accepted. Therefore, do Cohasset residents want to commit to a 15-year debt relying on funds from this CPA?

Based on the information above, I hope that the residents of Cohasset will give careful consideration when voting on the allocations of the CPA funds. With cuts in all of the state and local funds, it is my understanding that Cohasset faces a state budget cut of 10 percent, is it a wise decision to commit to this spending for such a long period of time.

Kimball's worker Andrews thanked

TO THE EDITOR:

Cohasset community is very fortunate in having Ellie Andrews who works at Kimball's by the Sea. On the 16th of March I left my handbag containing my wallet, all my cards, keys and IDs at the breakfast nook in the hotel.

Ellie retrieved the handbag, kept it safe, mailed it right away, next day delivery. I am very grateful to Ellie for her prompt action. I received everything intact. It was extremely difficult managing for two days without all my keys or any identification.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Selectman candidates:

Do you think Cohasset Harbor is fine just the way it is?

SELECTMAN/Ronnie McMorris

The Harbor is among the many resources with which Cohasset is blessed. It serves fisherman, pleasure boaters, and those wanting to walk and enjoy the view as well as those who like to relax, sip a drink, or taste some chowder. What more could one ask for?

There is no question that parking is an ongoing issue to be addressed and walkers and bicyclists have some safety concerns, especially around the Government Island entrance. But otherwise I'm in the camp that loves the Harbor just the way it is! It is beautiful, unassuming, and an important part of the ambience of Cohasset.

This is not a debate over the importance of local business. Businesses are an essential part of the community; their needs must be balanced along with others, and I will support them as I have in the past. The harbor businesses rely on the natural attractions of the area and should be involved in their conservation. Businesses and residents are fortunate that Cohasset enjoys an abundance of natural treasures including the harbor, other wetland areas, wooded areas, parks and marshland. Mother Nature never needs a beautification plan, just respect, care and preservation.

As with many of Cohasset's resources, it would be wonderful if there were more public space and public access at the Harbor. Public acquisition of any additional land is a goal that I support, and I encourage reasonable planning to alleviate parking and safety concerns. Having grown up in the city, there isn't a day I don't appreciate the beauty of Cohasset's many natural surroundings. They don't need to be improved.

SELECTMAN/Fred Koed

Since colonial times, Cohasset Harbor has changed very little except for the dredging which has cleared additional areas for mooring boats. What has changed over time are the wharves and uses at the harbor. The lobster fishing industry is vital along with fishing, boating and sailing. Cohasset Harbor is beautiful as it exists today.

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation (CRC) has been seeking public input regarding the harbor area to build a consensus on the design of proposed improvements. I agree that parking along Border Street encroaches on the sidewalk. Safety is the main concern especially along the portion between Atlantica and the Mill Bridge. I think most people would like to see some type of curbing to prevent cars parking on the sidewalk.

CRC has proposed replacing the existing wooden fencing along the harbor. The design firm has selected iron fencing as an alternative. Some citizens question the need to replace the fencing along the harbor. The harbor fencing should be low maintenance. In my opinion, that rules out iron fencing because of the salt-water environment. But what is wrong with the existing fence?

Cohasset has to be very careful in starting new initiatives. Cohasset needs to prioritize between downtown or the harbor. With the construction of the Greenbush Line apparently around the corner, Cohasset should be focusing on the downtown, especially the improvements along the Greenbush Corridor.

The mitigation agreement between the Town and the MBTA include James Brook Flood Control work under the town parking lot and other parking lot improvements. Cohasset also received a PWED (Public Works-Economic Development) grant that can be used for other improvements downtown. I believe that after the downtown is completed, Cohasset will be in a better position to determine if they wish to continue with improvements elsewhere.

SELECTMAN/Roger Q. Hill

For Cohasset Harbor, I think we should keep it much the way it has been for the past many years. There is no need for out of character wrought iron fences and light posts, brick side walks, wooden boardwalks built over the water, or most of the other "revitalization improvements" that have been proposed.

Some improvements could be made, like in the sidewalk surface from Memorial Park to Atlantica. Neighbors mention that the best thing that can happen along that stretch of sidewalk is simple - the police should be assigned the task of enforcing the No Parking rules on the sidewalk itself, something that is not done.

I am interested to see how my opponents respond to this week's question. Until recently, the Selectmen have backed the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation. Several weeks ago they wrote the CRC a letter attempting to ban its meetings, then wrote another letter rescinding the first letter. Are you confused about how the Selectmen feel? I certainly am.

The Selectmen have not provided leadership on harbor issues. They have supported the CRC as providing the town with "free planning". They voted against the Harbor Committee's proposed restriction on larger vessels moored on private docks as being "discriminatory." I say there is nothing "free" about the "planning" the CRC has provided. There is nothing "discriminatory" about rules that protect the ability of fishermen and recreational boaters to use the harbor.

I hold the harbor dear to the history of the town. Is it perfect? No. There have been no injuries, no major traffic accidents that I am aware of because of the way traffic flows through the harbor area today. I think the general population of the town feels the same way I do: "Don't fix it if it ain't broke!"

School Committee candidate:

In the budgetary tug of war are "average" kids lost in the shuffle — losing out to special needs and programs for high achievers?

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Jane Pescatore

The question of whether "average" students are overlooked in the public schools today is not necessarily one of money. For instance, two concepts that have arisen as a result of mandates regarding special needs children, inclusion and differentiated learning, have proven successful in helping all students learn at the top of their potential.

The two elementary schools in Cohasset have a "heterogeneous" grouping model that includes children who learn at very different rates and levels in each class. This stimulates students to try different ways of learning and to meet challenges they might not otherwise have the opportunity to experience. The recognition by teachers that each child learns in a very different way enables them to approach teaching with new strategies and techniques that enhance the learning experience for everyone in the classroom.

At the secondary level, however, the classroom model is altogether different.

Students are placed in "homogeneous" ability groupings. Average students are therefore not exposed to the stimulation of having a wide range of learning talent gathered in one classroom. The challenge to the teacher then becomes one of "engaging" these children in the learning process as actively as the high achievers or special needs students. Because the students are separated at the secondary level, it requires focused attention on those in the middle to insure that the standards set for them are the same as those set for more gifted students.

Creating a learning environment where all students are encouraged to achieve their maximum potential is the real issue to insure that "average" doesn't translate into "ignored".

Candidate profiles next week

Real scoop on twilight baseball

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I was wading through the pages of ancestor worship that passes for news in the Boston papers on St. Patrick's Day the other day when an item in the Herald canonizing a man named Bill "Twilight" Kelley caught my eye. It informed me that:

"Twilight is known as the father of Twilight Baseball in America. He started after-dinner baseball, the precursor to night baseball. The first twilight game was played at M Street Park in 1919. Kelley's All Stars beat Walworth 6-0, with Twilight pitching the shutout."

Baloney!

Everyone south of Boston can tell you what Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis, the high commissioner of baseball himself, once proclaimed, that Al Hollis of Braintree was the Father of Twilight Baseball, an idea that sprang from his sports-loving brain in 1906.

As for Twilight's game precursing night baseball, didn't we just get through celebrating the anniversary of the first baseball game played under the lights between teams representing Jordan Marsh and R.H. White department stores in Hull in 1880 before Twilight Kelley was born?

Al Hollis was the local correspondent for the Boston Globe, the Brockton Times and assorted Braintree papers when the idea came to him that the ideal way to spend the remaining daylight hours between supper and bedtime was throwing, hitting and catching a baseball.

After-supper baseball, first played on French's Common beside the Braintree Town Hall, proved so popular that the following year, 1907, Hollis was able to organize the Sunset League of town teams with who else but himself as the first president and arbitrator of disputes.

Twenty years later, organized baseball itself put its imprimatur on his idea when Commissioner Landis acknowledged Al Hollis to be the Father of Twilight Baseball in America.

As part of its bicentennial celebration, the town of Braintree also took notice of its favorite baseball son by placing a granite marker on the Town Hall Mall saluting Hollis as the "Father of Twilight League . . . for your dedicated service in behalf of all who love good sportsmanship."

Al Hollis was a dedicated newspaperman, too. He walked nearly a mile through the woods in Weymouth to cover a two-alarm fire for the Globe on Christmas Eve, 1933. When he got home he complained he didn't feel well. He died the next day, Christmas, at the age of 69.

He left a daughter and three sons, one of whom, Herbert B. Hollis, became a longtime state representative from Braintree. A fourth son, Alfred N. Hollis, a Quincy police officer, was shot and killed by a burglar while investigating a break in a Quincy hardware store.

The first night game preceded Hollis' Sunset League by more than 25 years and was promoted mostly as sort of a publicity stunt to demonstrate a new lighting system that its founder claimed could light up one square mile of a city at little cost from four light towers.

It was a miserable failure, from baseball's point of view, at least.

The Boston Globe reported that, despite the lights from three 100-foot tall towers, "flies could not be seen by the fielders and a lively grounder would set the players hunting about at a lively rate. The game was called when the score stood 16 to 16."

Night baseball wasn't tried at a professional level until 47 years later when two minor league teams gave it a shot in an exhibition game across the harbor in Lynn.

Bradley co-sponsors CPA amendment

State Rep. Garrett J. Bradley, D-Hingham, has co-sponsored an amendment to the Community Preservation Act that would benefit all communities that have decided to participate in the program. The CPA is a landmark law that encourages towns and cities in the Commonwealth to preserve and protect the historic resources and open spaces in their communities. Presently, historic assets owned by a municipality prior to the local adoption of the CPA are not eligible for funding for "rehabilitation", only for "maintenance." (Section 5(b)(2), Chapter 44 M.G.L). The amendment expands the use of CPA funds for the rehabilitation of historic resources to include a municipality's previously acquired properties.

Sections 1 and 2 of this amendment would rectify an oversight of the original act. The term "historic structures and landscapes" is defined in the definitional section but is never used in the text of the act. Instead, the term "historic resources" is used in its place. The amendment will make the term "historic resources" consistent throughout the act.

Section 3 creates a definition for the term "rehabilitation." The CPA Act does not define the term. This has led to some confusion about exactly what a community can use CPA funds to do. The amendment includes in its definition of rehabilitation the use of funds to comply with building and access codes and federal guidelines for historical structures. This includes leaving intact the design of the exterior of the building and the use of appropriate materials in renovation so the structure retains its original historic nature.

Section 4 specifically changes the language in the act to permit communities to use CPA funds to rehabilitate previously acquired historic resources. The present language states that rehabilitation can only be done to those assets purchased or acquired after communities have adopted the Act. The amendment does not alter this provision for community housing, open spaces and land for recreational use. It simply permits the use of funds for both previously acquired historic resources as well as those purchased pursuant to the act.

Section 5 allows this amendment to apply retroactively to communities which have already held town meetings and approved projects. Without this section, towns would have to hold another town meeting and re-approve their CPA projects. This would cause an unnecessary delay in the commencement of projects.

"These technical changes will allow communities some flexibility. A prime example is the situation Hingham is dealing with in regards to GAR Hall," said Bradley. "Currently, the town is unable to use any CPA funds to repair this structure. The passage of this amendment corrects this situation."

Ivory-billed Woodpecker —lost or found?

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

The Ivory-billed Woodpecker is — or was — the largest woodpecker found in North America. It has an ivory-colored beak 3 inches long and 1 inch wide at its base. The bird is impressive enough to have been nicknamed the "King of the Woodpeckers" and the "Lord God Bird". This last, because it sometimes inspired the response, "Lord God!" The bills were widely used by North American Indians for decoration and in trade. Like most woodpeckers, it is mostly black and white with red on the head of the male. The similarity to the Pileated Woodpecker makes most of the recent "sightings" difficult to assess. Only the Imperial Woodpecker in Mexico is larger.

The Latin name, Campephilus principalis, means principal grub eater. Ivory-billed Woodpeckers strip long pieces of bark away from tree trunks to find beetle larvae. They forage in dead or dying trees of old-growth bottomland hardwood forests, mostly in the southeast. They need at least a three-square-mile territory per pair. Extensive logging has drastically reduced the availability of this preferred habitat. The Pileated Woodpecker has similar tastes, but has been able to adapt to smaller newer growth forests. Adaptability can mean the difference between survival and extinction.

In 1924 Arthur Allen found, with the help of a guide, a pair of ivorybills with an active nest in Florida. Not long afterwards, these birds were shot by two taxidermists with the permission of the authorities in Florida. In 1932 a Louisiana State legislator named Spencer shot an ivorybill. This prompted the Louisiana Division of Fur and Wildlife to stop issuing permits for shooting ivorybills. In 1938 Cleveland Bent, in his "Life Histories of North American Birds", says that the Ivory-billed Woodpecker "is almost extinct". James T. Tanner searched for, studied and wrote extensively about the Ivory-billed Woodpecker. In 1942 he documented birds in the Singer Tract of Louisiana swampland, so named for the land owned by Singer Sewing Machine Co. Two years later in 1944, Richard Pough documented the last known Ivory-billed Woodpecker in the U.S. According to Christopher Cokinos in "Hope is the Thing With Feathers", wildlife artist Don Eckelberry found this same female three months later. He spent two weeks in the Singer Tract painting and following it, even as the forest was being logged around them. Concerted efforts by Tanner and others to save the area from logging had failed. In 1950 Ludlow Griscom says in his introduction to a popular edition of "Audubon's Birds of America", "The Ivory-billed Woodpecker is almost certainly about to become extinct in the near future".

In the 60 years and more since the definitive sightings of Tanner and Pough, there have been many unreliable reports of ivorybills. Most are from a single person with no one to corroborate the claim. Descriptions are often inconclusive. Much video footage turns out to be of Pileated Woodpeckers. Photographs tend to be unclear. Searches following up on these reports have not succeeded in re-finding the birds. It is extremely difficult to prove a negative. There is no single moment when extinction can be declared to have happened.

Field guides written by Pough, Robbins and Peterson, in 1945, 1987, and 1991 respectively, refer to the Ivory-billed Woodpecker as "apparently doomed", "on verge of extinction", and "very close to extinction, if indeed it still exists". Three field guides written by Stokes, Kaufmann and Sibley and published between 1997 and 2001 do not even mention the Ivory-billed Woodpecker. Officially it is listed as an endangered species in the U.S., not extinct.

Hope was renewed briefly in 1986 and 1987 when individuals of an ivorybill subspecies were found in Cuba. Uncertainty lingers over the status of ivorybills in Cuba as it does in America. Searching for the ivorybill anywhere requires maneuvering through swampy areas, frequently requiring a boat. It also demands encountering swarms of mosquitoes, having a certain comfort level with confronting snakes, and being able to find one's way through tangled underbrush without marked paths. Birds easily fly away over watery landscapes that slow or stop pursuing birders. January and February offer fewer bugs, more sluggish snakes, more vocal birds, and better visibility due to fewer leaves on the trees.

Then comes April 1999. A young forestry student named David Kulivan went Wild Turkey hunting in the 35,000 acre Pearl River Wildlife Management Area in Louisiana. It happened to be April Fool's Day, which adds to the mystique. He returned without a turkey, but with a story that set the birding community to buzzing. He told his wildlife professor at Louisiana State University that he had watched a pair of Ivory-billed Woodpeckers for several minutes at close range. He had no photographs. He had not made a tape. Professor Wright in turn told Dr. Remsen, the state ornithologist of Louisiana. Remsen cross-examined Kulivan at length about every detail until he was satisfied that this was not a joke, and that Kulivan just might have seen what he claimed. Remsen was able to get the Louisiana Department of Wildlife and Fisheries to suspend logging in the Pearl River area, although hunting continued. Efforts intensified to find these birds again, but failed.

The Kulivan sighting prompted Zeiss Sports Optics in 2000 to ask Remsen to help organize a systematic search, which they would sponsor, for January 2002. Six experts were chosen to explore the same Pearl River area. They worked in two-person teams, each with a digital video camera, GPS unit, a parabolic microphone with digital audiotape recorder, and waterproof notebooks. One news reporter was allowed to tag along with each team for a day at a time. The trip began on January 17 and lasted 30 days. In addition, the Cornell Lab of Ornithology attached 12 battery-powered acoustic recording units (ARUs) to trees at key locations. These devices, which have been used with whales and other animals, stayed up for two months. The recordings will be analyzed and compared with recordings of Ivory-billed Woodpecker calls made in 1935.

The Zeiss search produced no sightings or photographs, only tantalizing signs that could indicate the presence of ivorybills. Lots of scaled bark, some "double rap" sounds, and huge entry holes all are suggestive of an ivorybill, although a pileated cannot be ruled out. Despite disappointingly inconclusive evidence, hope persists that the Ivory-billed Woodpecker lives. Stay tuned.

CEA says thanks

TO THE EDITOR

Cohasset Seniors have recently enjoyed several wonderful social events, thanks to the generous contributions of many individuals and groups in the community. In particular, Cohasset Elder Affairs would like to thank all those who helped plan, prepare, serve, entertain and clean up for the Valentine Tea in February, and the St. Patrick's Day dinner on March 13. Both were joyous occasions that brought friends both old and new together in an atmosphere of fun and celebration.

There is a long list of people to be thanked: members of the CEA Board, Anna Abbruzzese and the Gourmet Club, The Rev. Ritts and the Second Congregational Church, Father Mulvehill and St. Anthony's Church, chef Paul Guinee and his family, Osgood School parents and children for baking and cards, Charles Coleman and Judy Cobble for sharing their musical talents, the Nevin Academy of Irish Step Dancing, Thelma Harrold for her special chocolate lollipops for both occasions, and many individuals who drove the van, shopped, prepared food, set tables, served, cleaned up and restored things to their proper places.

We appreciate everyone's contribution. It is wonderful to be in a community that offers this kind of opportunities to its seniors. Special thanks to the Gourmet Club: Claire O'Brien, Terry Sullivan, Marie Sullivan, Kathy Becker, Nancy Anderson, Joan Carlo, Lydia Dinsmore, Marie Perroncello, Barbara E11iott, Ellie Wilson, Edna Cavanaugh, June Someone, Helen Carter, Angie Kelley, Dolores Roy and Pat Sargent. Thank you all!

We are looking forward to a special day on April 12, when adult volunteers will read to the kindergarten, first, second and third grade classes at the Osgood School, and then join the children for a brief social time together. Anyone interested in reading may call CEA by April 3, for details and to sign up.

COHASSET CARES

Recycling effort at CMHS takes root

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

To a teacher or a parent or to anyone else concerned about values, one of the most inspiring experiences in life is witnessing idealism in young people. Idealism is what makes the difference between just living and really living.

In my more than 30 years of pretty intense involvement with Cohasset, my real pay was the opportunity to make a difference in the lives of high school students. I was never let down with an utter absence of kids who would really listen here in this town. I never failed to be inspired by Cohasset's students.

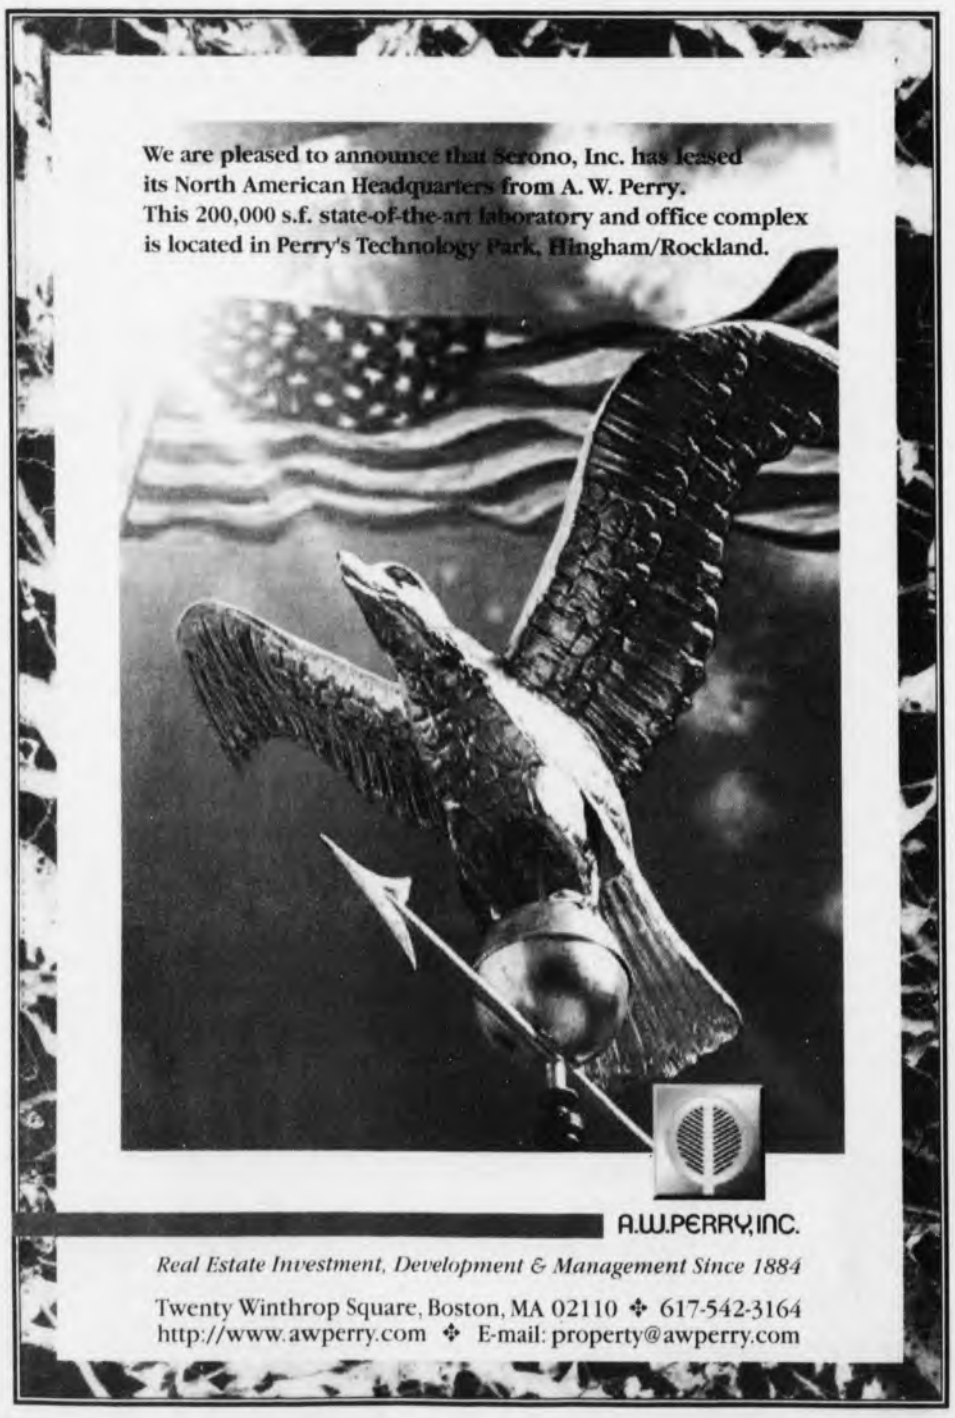
From 1960 to the present, Cohasset has presented young people of conviction, students wanting to make the most out of life — in ways other than financial. Cohasset, like most American towns, has always had the mix of economic backgrounds, sliding scales of comfort that somehow leveled out when it came to principles and to character. The kids all understood honesty and possible ! ways of cheating. They recognized leadership and the peer pressure from championing a cause. Beneath the veneer of clothing styles and cliques were real people who were and are trying to decide how to live. What we said, and even more what we did, were and are heeded quite carefully. Despite the town's idiosyncrasies, we've always had reachable kids.

I was similarly inspired by a recent visit to Jack Buckley's Community Service class, accompanied by Merle Brown, and by the follow-up conference with the students who are behind the present recycling efforts at the middle/high school — Curt Kahn, Brian Litchfield, Ben Lynner, Evan Pestone, and Nick Spirito. Despite the first-period hour, students' faces were receptive. Feedback began slowly because the whole recycling effort at the school is slow. Idealism takes effort. Sorting out your values is hard work, and acting on them takes strength. But these students have begun the effort, and, especially in the follow-up conference where RTF patriarch Arthur Lehr joined us, conversation flowed with increasing concern.

One of our topics was the fact that it's easier to contemplate — and act upon — values when you're comfortably fed and housed, but at the same time perhaps those who are comfortably fed and housed need to get out of town — like to Appalachia — to learn how to really live. Insulation can protect, but it can also smother. Holes in the insulation are made here and there for electrical flow.

We'll have to have Part II to discuss the nuts and bolts of the new recycling effort at the Cohasset Middle/High School. See you next time.

Allan MacDonald is publicity Chairman of the Cohasset Recycling Committee.



HEALTH NOTES

Jesse's legacy: A town that pulled together

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

On March 15, Jesse Sargent's tragic death left the town an unexpected legacy. Early Saturday afternoon, I was called by Joe Godzik, the town health officer, who had been working all morning to deal with the untimely death of this popular tenth-grader at the Middle-High School. He told me of an emergency meeting called by the Selectmen in response to Jesse's death of a meningococcal bacteria infection. When I arrived at Town Hall at 3 p.m. Saturday it could have been any busy day in mid morning. Everyone was there. All the selectmen, the Town Manager, the police chief, fire chief, emergency management chief, recreation officer, Jack DeLorenzo, the School Committee, and a heavy representation of the school staff. The meeting in the selectmen's office lasted about 45 minutes, and when it was over, everyone had a task, which they began with a sense of sad but dedicated commitment.

There was an enormous amount of work to be done. Early on, it was decided that everyone who had a child in the system should be notified and given the proper information about the crisis and what they could do. Documents were prepared so that everyone had the right information about Jesse's sad story, and how it would affect their kids. Those who had been with Jesse last would receive information about defending against infection, and others should be given background information about the disease. It was agreed that one explanation be drafted and used to avoid disseminating conflicting information.

A letter had to be drafted, lists and addresses of the 400 or so families in the middle and high school who were to be notified, had to be prepared. Everyone who might possibly have been exposed would have to be contacted and warned. Instructions given as to the precautions to be taken and how to seek help. Shortly after the meeting at the town hall, another at the high school gathered together more than 30 volunteers who proceeded to make door-to-door visits to all affected families. Tenth-graders, Jesse's class, were very special; many appeared at the meeting wanting to help and did a large part of getting the word out to parents of the students, carrying the letters prepared by the volunteers at the high school to the door of each house that needed notification. Finally, packets of information were given or left between the doors of every affected home. Meanwhile, the town nursing staff members were calling everyone in other towns who might have been exposed. Jesse was enormously popular and active, and had friends everywhere, Weymouth, Scituate, Hull, all of whom he had seen within the previous 10 days. All were notified.

All the churches were contacted, clergy given information about the situation, and by Sunday morning congregations knew the sad story.

At the time of this printing, the waiting period is finally over, and anyone who was infected would have shown symptoms. So we can now conclude that no one was infected with this strange and deadly bacterium. The town should give grateful thanks to all those dedicated and caring officials who helped during this crisis and particularly those who gave so freely and caringly of their time.

About Meningococcemia

Meningococcal Disease is a bacterial infection which takes two forms: Menningitis which affects tissue surrounding the brain, and Meningococcemia which is an infection of the blood and can affect other organs. There is no evidence that Jesse had meningitis, but rather the bacterium probably invaded his blood stream and affected other organs. Susceptibility to the disease is higher among the immune compromised, youths and young adults, and the threat decreases with age.1 The bacteria are spread from person to person through close contact with a sick person's saliva (spit). Close contact includes activities such as kissing, sneezing, coughing, sharing water bottles, sharing eating/drinking utensils, or sharing cigarettes with someone who is sick.

Persons showing signs and symptoms of illness are diagnosed by culturing their spinal fluid (meningitis) or blood (meningococcemia). It may take up to 72 hours to have test results. Sometimes a doctor can make an earlier diagnosis by looking at a person's spinal fluid under a microscope.

Signs and symptoms of meningococcemia include a sudden onset of fever, chills, and feeling unusually weak and tired. A rash may be present, often involving the palms of the hands and soles of the feet. Anyone who has these symptoms should contact their doctor right away.

Antibiotics are used to treat people with both (meningococcal) meningitis and meningococcemia. People who have had close contact with the sick person any time during the two weeks before she/he became ill may also need to take antibiotics. Preventive treatments of all close contacts should be implemented up to two weeks after onset of the first case but preferably as soon as possible within the first 24 hours.

Close contacts of a person who has meningococcal disease are treated with antibiotics because the bacteria may be spread from the sick person to other people through contact with the saliva (spit) of the sick person. The antibiotics will kill the bacteria and prevent illness.

There is a vaccine (shot) against meningococcal disease, but the shot is usually given for travel or under certain conditions. Routine childhood shots with meningococcal vaccine are not recommended, and the shot is not known to be effective in children under 2 years of age. Shots are given to travelers who visit countries where meningococcal disease is very common and shots are given if there is an outbreak of meningococcal disease in a community. In addition, college freshman who want to reduce their risk of meningococcal disease may choose to be vaccinated with meningococcal vaccine. All college students and their parents should talk to their healthcare providers about meningococcal disease, the vaccine and the specific circumstances of the students.

If you have had close contact with a person who has been diagnosed with a meningococcal illness you should call your health care provider and get an antibiotic. If you have had contact with an ill person, but have not had close contact, you should be aware of the symptoms of illness and contact your doctor immediately if you have any of these symptoms.

Meningitis can be caused by different organisms, including other bacteria and viruses. Only certain types of meningitis require treatment of the sick person's close contacts. If you have questions about meningitis or your exposure to a sick person, contact your family doctor, the Board of Health or the Massachusetts Department of Public Health Epidemiology Program (617) 983-6800.

The legacy Jesse Sargent has left us is the active and caring response of literally hundreds of people in town who, by their actions and thoughts gave him a special place in the consciousness of Cohasset.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health, Massachusetts Department of Public Health.

Shooting for 'Tunes of Glory'

8500 was set at the Millennium March in Edinburgh, Scotland in August 2000.

McWilliams had been intrigued by bagpipes for years, but did not attempt to learn them until his wife Alice called his bluff by giving him a "practice chanter" for Christmas. Like all beginning pipers, he used this simple recorder-like reeded instrument to learn the ornate movements and elaborate embellishments that make bagpipe music unique. With practice and the help of teacher Fred Fletcher, Pipe Major for the Crann Tara Pipes & Drums of Boston, he eventually moved on to the full bagpipes.

"I then learned that the stories are true," he says. "Bagpipes really are among the most difficult instruments to master. I not only had to contend with the chanter, but also three drones, each with its own reed, and a bag that I had to inflate correctly and lightly squeeze just right to keep everything going.

"In the early days, my sons would flee the house when I tried to fire up the monster. I'm only now wrangling it into submission to play some tunes. It's still not easy."

Those new skills will be mission-critical on April 6 when McWilliams attempts to hold his own with some of the world's best pipers as they march together up Manhattan's Sixth Avenue to Central Park. The day's play list will include tunes ranging from the rousing Scotland The Brave to the classic Irish favorite, Minstrel Boy. Once in Central Park, the 10,000 -strong throng will stand at attention to play a massed band rendition of Amazing Grace in homage to the resilience of New York City and those affected by the events of September 11.

Is McWilliams nervous? "In my minds-eye, " he says, "I have an image of a lone piper screwing up random notes and embellishments, causing all 10,000 marchers to stop and glare at him. You can guess who he is."

Even so, McWilliams is glad to put it all on the line for a good cause.

"Cancer has hit my clan a number of times, including both of my parents," he says. "I think this is a great way to hit back by raising much-needed funds for special care and research. Also, it's a genuine honor to play alongside pipe bands of the legendary New York Police and Fire Departments as well as talented pipers coming in from the far corners of the earth.

"I think we're going to make a statement for the world to remember. No one will really care whether I'm a piping hot-shot or not…I hope."

About the Tunes of Glory Charities Michael McWilliams is participating in the Tunes of Glory march, at his own expense, to raise funds for cancer research. All organizational costs and administrative expenses for the event are covered by Scottish Power PLC, Visit Scotland (the Scottish Tourist Board) and Dewars Whisky. Proceeds will go to Gilda's Club Worldwide, a US-based network of social support centers for cancer patients, and to Marie Curie Cancer Care, an organization that combines home and hospice care with research across the United Kingdom.

New England and US donors wishing to support this effort should write out a check to "Gilda's Club Worldwide" and send it to: Michael McWilliams PO Box 507 Cohasset, MA 02025.

Ten hardy 'soles' walk 60 miles for breast cancer

Since the Avon Breast Cancer three-day walk began in October 1998, it has netted a total of $63 million for breast cancer medical research, education and early detection. This year's Boston 3-day walk is scheduled for May 17–19. An expected 3,500 people of various ages and fitness levels are anticipated to walk. Each participant will average 20 miles per day for the three-day event.

Amongst the many participants are 10 women who live between Cohasset and Wellesley. As a newly formed team whom they call "The Sole Sisters" these 10 remarkable women have committed to walking the Avon three-day together. As with all participants, each member has committed to raising a minimum of $1900 before April.

From left, Jo Feldman, Ceil Garber, Kathy Vieira, Pam Algera and Sharon Housley are part of the group of the 'Sole Sisters' to walk for breast cancer research. The women in the group come from Cohasset, Hingham, Canton, Hull, Marshfield and Wellesley.

All of the Sole Sisters are training for the three-day walk, and slowly but surely, are going further each time.

Two of the members, both from Hull, did the Avon three-day walk last year. Ceil Garber and Pam Algera both admit that they don't know if they are even more committed to the cause after last year's experience or just down-right crazy, but they are well into their fund-raising efforts and training for the up coming walk in May.

"Last year we didn't train at all, except for one walk from Hull to Hingham and back and we really paid the price for it!" says Algera. "After the first 20 miles, we were feeling OK and were anxious to tell our families. We laid down in our tent (one of the amenities that is provided for all walkers) and called home on our cell phones. We were very pumped up and they were really proud of us. It was after we hung up that we realized neither of us could move! Our muscles had completely tightened up on us, and we literally had to roll out of our tents to get to dinner".

This year is different. All of the Sole Sisters are training for the three-day walk, and slowly but surely, are going further each time. The entire team has not walked together for any training walks to date, but hope to get a few in as a group before May 17.

"Since it's not a race and we can walk at our own pace, it's not a requirement that we all train together all of the time. The idea behind the 'team' is to be able to provide each other with moral support, both prior to and during the three-day event." says Sharon Housley, who lives in Plympton. "We also plan to have some fun with it. I have created a web site www.solesisters.com, and other members of the group are busy creating T-shirts with our team logo. And why not have fun! After all, sixty miles is the equivalent to 2-1/2 marathons," she adds.

Unfortunately, breast cancer touched everyone's lives in one way or another", says 44-year-old Jo Feldman, one of the older Sole Sisters member who lives in both Canton and Hull. Either you know someone directly or you know of someone who knows someone with the disease. Anything we can do to help eliminate this disease will be worth it – even if it takes sore muscles and blistered feet".

5,000 golden lights will help fight cancer

Through the efforts of a group of volunteers staffing the Daffodil Store in Hingham's Community Center, 70 South St. in Hingham Square,Tuesday through Friday, April 2 to 5, the area will be brightened by at least 5,000 golden blooms this spring and be helping in the fight against cancer.

Organizers of the Daffodil Store have ordered no less than 10 boxes of the flowers each containing 50 bouquets of 10 budded daffodils, and are confident that they will be sold out by the end of the week. These are flowers that are grown in the Pacific northwest and flown here for prompt delivery. Immersed in water overnight, the buds break forth into beautiful yellow blossoms by morning.

A bouquet of 10 daffodils can be purchased for $6 at the Daffodil Store.

A bouquet of 10 daffodils can be purchased for $6 at the Daffodil Store with the proceeds going to help the American Cancer Society reach its goal of $3.5 million in New England this year. Prominent among the services these funds help support is the Road to Recovery program headquartered in Hingham, through which volunteer drivers take patients to hospitals and doctors' offices for treatment.

Working with the founder of the Daffodil Store, Helen Ireton, this year are the following members of the Community Service Committee of the Hingham Mothers' Club who will staff the store: Karen Hale, Aylene Calnan, Gretchen Zinc Stromberg and Mary Maynard .

Baseball team moves on

Coach Knurek feels team can rebound from season-long loss of Bolster

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Cohasset High athletic teams can rarely absorb a major loss. With a student body of roughly 300, that's a fact of life.

Few, if any, high school baseball programs would not be deeply impacted by the loss of a player the caliber of Nick Bolster. Needless to say, Cohasset High is not among this prestigious minority.

Doctors last week denied clearance for the Cohasset star shortstop/pitcher to participate in baseball this Spring, wiping out the last hope this gifted athlete had of competing athletically in his senior year.

Bolster's nightmare began approximately 11 months ago—halfway through his junior baseball campaign— when he woke up one morning with blurred visions in his right eye. Turns out he'd somehow suffered a detached retina. He's had hopes of being cleared before each of this school year's sports seasons— football in the fall, basketball this past winter and now baseball—but each time his doctors told him the same thing: "it wasn't worth the risk."

"I feel bad for Nick," was the first thing Cohasset head baseball coach Bob Knurek said when asked about last week's diagnosis. "He would've been a captain for us and an extremely important player. I know how badly he wanted to play."

Without Bolster, who threw a no-hitter in his sophomore year and was slated to be the number one hurler this season, the three-man rotation Knurek envisioned as potentially being the strongest in his five year tenure is now down to two. Senior captain Tim Straughn moves from the projected number two to number one and junior Mike Snowdale becomes the number two.

With the team playing three games per week in most cases, a number three starter is essential. Sophomore Mike Dooley, who pitched well in a few relief stints last season, seems the likeliest candidate at this time to get that call.

"I feel real good about Tim and Mike as the number one and two guys," said Knurek. "Tim really throws hard and made a lot of progress last year, and Mike looks like he's going to be real reliable. Dooley has the potential to be a good pitcher, but he's young and untested as a starter. He did a nice job as a freshman, though."

One of the problems with making Straughn the number one pitcher is he is also the team's best catcher. There are a few candidates to catch him, but this is just one of a myriad of issues Knurek has been trying to address since practice sessions began last Monday— a situation

IT'S OFFICIAL: SPRING IS HERE!

The boys lacrosse team managed to make it outdoors between rain showers last week. Here, we see Nick Spirito and Matt Davis tangling during a defensive drill on Friday at Alumni Field. Some of the Cohasset High Spring teams haven't even been able to take to the fields since practice sessions kicked off last Monday due to inclement weather.

Cohasset gymnast Kristin Sheerin headlines our 10-member Mariner All-Scholastic gymnastics team that also features two of her teammates from the Pilgrim Conference 2 championship Cohasset-Norwell team: C.H.S. junior Meredith Bixby and N.H.S. freshman Jen Guiney.

Mariner All-Scholastic Gymnastics Team

Cohasset-Norwell squad's Sheerin, Bixby and Guiney named among area's elite

The 10 gymnasts you see honored here are the ones we determined through research and personal observation to be tops in Marinerland (i.e. Abington, Cohasset, Hanover, Hingham, Kingston, Marshfield, Norwell, Pembroke, Rockland and Scituate).

A few of the girls you see here listed below as Honorable Mentions also received some strong consideration for the "A-Team", but we resigned ourselves to 10, and they are:

Kristin Sheerin - Senior All-Around - Cohasset

Kristin Sheerin

The Cohasset High six year gymnastics star will get a chance to put an exclamation point on her outstanding high school career at the senior Nationals in Las Vegas in mid-May…she qualified for this opportunity by finishing sixth in the all-around at the All-State individuals competition on March 10, and third among seniors with her score of 35.3…interestingly, the last Cohasset or Norwell athlete to go to Nationals as a senior was Sheerin's coach, Cara Connerty… was the key figure in helping the Cohasset-Norwell gymnastics squad to its first league championship since the schools' programs merged…Sheerin just missed winning her third Pilgrim Conference 2 title this year, finishing second to Carver's Steven Cudworth (34.85) in the all-around with her score of 34.6…started competing for the Cohasset gymnastics team as a seventh grader…Sheerin also captured the league championship as an eighth grader and again last winter…Sheerin holds every Cohasset High gymnastics record: a 36.1 in the all-around, 8.95 on the vault, 9.3 on the floor, 9.35 on the beam and 8.95 on the bars…trains year-round at the Ellis School of Gymnastics in Braintree…also a sensational lacrosse player for Cohasset High…Kristin will be attending the State University of New York-Brockport this Fall, and compete intercollegiately for this school's team, which finished fourth in the Div. 3 national championships this past season…is leaning toward majoring in communications or psychology…Cohasset-Norwell Coach Kara Connerty: "What else can you say about Kristin. She's obviously a very gifted and dedicated gymnast who works hard year round. For six years, she's been incredibly devoted to the program and the sport. The thing about her this year is she was such a great leader and captain. She really helped keep things together for us with a young team."

Softball returns to Cohasset High after a four year absence

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

It's Lady Skippers deja vous.

Junior athletic veteran Heather Peraino teamed up with 11 freshmen and sophomores to fight for a cause..and they won. Cohasset High has reinstated softball as an interscholastic activity after a four year absence.

The team will compete at the junior varsity level for this season, but next year there seems a very good chance it will make it back up to top-level South Shore League varsity competition.

Sound oddly familiar? It is.

Three years ago, a group of eager freshman and sophomores teamed up with a junior to resurrect the girls basketball program, dormant for three years at Cohasset High School. With no seniors to guide them, these girls impressed the administration enough with their Junior Varsity 10-8 record that the next year they were given the right to a full Varsity SSL schedule.

With the talent down in the younger grades, the Lady Skippers have set up a respectable hoops program, that should remain a potential playoff team down the road. Lady hoops coach Ellen Carr, who has been with the team for the three year re-birth of the program, has already predicted her team will get 10 wins next year, with the opportunity to surprise some people when the Div. 4 tournament rolls around. This is exactly what the softball team wants to have happen to them.

"It is going to take some time," said coach Deb Bostwick, who is coaching her first softball team in eight years. "But next year, we hope to move right up to varsity."

The interest and talent are present in large numbers in the cur-

Girls lacrosse squad seeks to improve on last year's 10-6 season

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The girls lacrosse team made great strides toward establishing themselves as a legitimate contender last year, finishing 10-6, and qualifying for the State tournament. This year's team, having lost nobody to graduation, and with a very strong senior class, hopes to improve upon that considerably.

"I just want the team to succeed."

admitted first year lacrosse coach, but no stranger to Skipper coaching, Torin Sweeney. "I am very pleased with the effort so far."

Sweeney, a longtime head coach of the wrestling team, has also coached golf and football at Cohasset High, but never lacrosse. The team did not have a coach with less than two weeks remaining before practices started, and athletic director Ron Ford just wanted somebody to fill in who had experience coaching at the varsity level.

Veteran lacrosse coach Kathy Gadiano, a teacher in Weymouth, is presently out on a maternity leave, but is expected to return to the Cohasset sidelines next Spring.

in style, taking sixth place overall in her best event, the vault, at the All-State championships on March 10 with an average score of 8.55...Bixby surprised at All-States by sticking her vault, the tuck tsuk, after never having completed it the entire year...Bixby also took a pair of first places at the Pilgrim Conference 2 meet with winning performances on the uneven bars (8.05) and vault (8.65)...Bixby has been named to the Pilgrim Conference League All-Star team all three years...two time Mariner All-Scholastic selection...this was her second year competing in the all-around for her the Cohasset-Norwell squad, taking the place of senior captain Carly Carter (a 2001 Mariner All-Scholastic who's been injured the past season and a half)... has already been named a team captain for next year...trains year-round at the Ellis School of Gymnastics in Braintree ...top scores this season: vault- 8.6, floor- 8.7, bars- 8.4, beam-8.35, all around- 33.8...would like to continue her gymnastics career in college... Cohasset-Norwell Coach Kara Cunnerty: "Meredith works extremely hard, and she really matured this season as both a leader and a gymnast. With Kristin (Sheerin) gone, we'll obviously be looking to her for even bigger things next season."

Julia Wilson - Junior (Capt.) All-Around - Marshfield

Julia Wilson

An early season injury couldn't stop this talented gymnast from capturing an Old Colony League All-star season...Missed only two meets due to a sprained right ankle, but slowly nursed herself back to 100 percent by the end of the year, helping the Lady Rams capture second in the OCL behind only state champs Barnstable...Took two medals at the State Individual Championships, taking first on the bars (9.1) and second on the vault (8.825)...Was an OCL All-star on the bars...Won the All-Around at the OCL Championships and tied for first on the vault...Competes year round with the Spectrum Gymnastics Club...A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic, Wilson will captain the Marshfield team again next season...The junior has hopes of continuing her gymnastics career in college. Marshfield coach Marion Cherubini: "She started the year with an injury but kept in shape, and still worked on strength and flexibility and was at full strength by the end of the season. That says a lot about her dedication. She's extremely competitive, determined and focused. Gymnastics is what she wants."

Nicole Souris - Junior All-Around - Marshfield

Nicole Souris

After sustaining a right ankle injury that kept her out of the latter half of the 2001 season, Souris returned in top shape this year... Dominated the All-Around competition during the beginning half of the season before reinjuring the ankle midway through the year...Returned and competed on all events but floor, helping the Lady Rams capture second in the Old Colony League behind powerhouse Barnstable...Was an OCL All-star on the vault...Qualified for the State Individual Championships on the bars...Competes year round with the Spectrum Gymnastics Club in Brockton...Says her most favorite event is the beam because she "likes the challenge of it"...A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic, Souris will return as one of Marshfield's the top gymnasts next season...Though still a junior, Souris is considering attending UNH and URI, where she would like to continue her gymnastics career. Marshfield coach Marion Cherubini: "She's very good in bars and vault. She's a consistent performer. She really led the team when Julia was out in the beginning of the year. She's a very dedicated athlete."

Christine Walker - Junior Bars - Marshfield

Christine Walker

When tragedy struck the team's top two gymnasts, Walker was right there to step in...Always a steady performer, Walker came on extremely strong this season, filling All-Around spots in the beginning of the season when Julia Wilson was injured and at the end when Nicole Souris went down...A stellar performer on the bars and in the All-Around, Walker's increased role this season helped lead the team to a second place finish in the Old Colony League behind state champs Barnstable...Qualified for the State Individual Championships on the bars...Finished third in the All-Around at the Pilgrim Conference 1 Championships and was a first-place All-star on the bars...Competes year round with the Ellis Gymnastics Club in Braintree...A first-time Mariner All-Scholastic, Walker will return next season as a top contender...The junior is considering continuing her gymnastics career in college at William and Mary, Bridgeport, Ithaca or Cornell. Marshfield coach Marion Cherubini: "Christine's performance this season was a pleasant surprise. She'd always been a consistent performer, but she really came on strong this season, especially when we needed her most. She's a very powerful and dedicated performer. She loves the sport and it shows."

Norwell High's Jen Guiney followed up her second place finish in the YMCA National championships with a sensational freshman campaign for the Norwell-Cohasset gymnastics team.

Bronwyn Riggs - Senior (Capt.) Floor exercise - Hingham

Bronwyn Riggs

Already one of two of the Harborwomen's top gymnasts, Riggs was thrust into the spotlight this season when senior captain Meg Peterson's year ended before it began due to injury...Had the difficult task of taking the reigns of the extremely young Hingham squad and ably filled the role...A Pilgrim Conference 2 All-star on the floor, Riggs also took seventh place in the same event at the State Individual Championships (8.85)...The senior was fourth in the All-Around at the PC2 Championships...Riggs competes year round with the Spectrum Gymnastics Club in Brockton and has qualified for the Regional meet to be held in Woburn next month...A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic, Riggs hopes to attend Bowdin next fall where she will major in Biology with the hopes of becoming a veterinarian. Hingham coach Patricia Anderson: "Her floor routine was awesome. She was definitely a leader on the team this year. We're expecting even bigger things next year."

Molly Fanning - Freshman All-Around - Hanover

Molly Fanning

In just her first season with the Hanover High squad, Fanning quickly established herself as one of the best All-Around gymnasts in the Pilgrim Conference 2...Just a freshman, Fanning was the top point-getter for the Lady Indians squad, which finished second in the PC2 behind only rival Cohasset/Norwell...A PC2 All-star on the beam, Fanning finished third in the All-Around at the Pilgrim Conference 2 Championships...Her explosive routines and strong dismounts are what set her apart from her competitors, according to the team's first-year coach...Fanning competes year round with the Ellis Gymnastics Club in Braintree...A first-time Mariner All-Scholastic, Fanning will be among the top returnees to the Hanover squad next season. Hanover coach Alesha Delgiacco: "She had an incredible year for a freshman. She's dedicated to the sport and always gives 100 percent. Her vaults are very strong and she's incredible on the bars. I think we're going to be hearing her name a lot in the coming years."

Keri Gerrish - Sophomore Bars - Hanover

Keri Gerrish

Dedication and hard work is what made this youngster have a breakout year for the Lady Indians team..., Competed in the beginning of the year on three events because she needed a floor routine and later dominated the second all-around spot midway through the season, after working with a choreographer...Though just a sophomore, the team's first-year coach said Gerrish has already established herself as a leader on the squad...The coach also said Gerrish's floor routine was "the best in the league"...Gerrish competes year round...She is making her second appearance on a Mariner All-Scholastic squad as she made our field hockey team last fall...The sophomore will be among the top returnees to the Hanover squad next season. Hanover coach Alesha Delgiacco: "All four of her routines on each apparatus were just so strong. She really came full circle this year. She's already assumed a leadership role on the team. She's extremely focused and the other girls have picked up on that. She's very well respected amongst her peers."

Cristy Pforr - Senior Beam – Silver Lake

Cristy Pforr

A four year Old Colony League all-star and two time Mariner All-Scholastic... made the league all-star team her first three years for her work on the beam, and this final season for her floor routine...did not qualify for the state championships this year after doing so the previous two seasons, missing out on a spot in the balance beam competition by less than two-tenths of a point in her season average...qualified as a sophomore and junior for the beam...took 11th at states on the beam as a junior, missing out on a medal by one-tenth of a point with a strong score of 8.55...took seventh at the same event as a sophomore with a score of 8.5...takes private lessons year round at Head over Heels in Norwell...the only four year competitor ever for Silver Lake in the all-around competition, with only two being allowed per team...finished her final season with averages of 8.565 on the beam (best of 8.7), 8.575 on the floor exercise, 8.125 on the vault and 7.875 on the uneven bars. Her best all-around score on the season was a 33.3... hopes to attend Rhode Island College and would like to continue her gymnastics career there... plans to major in Early Elementary Education...Silver Lake coach Lindsay Leigh-Consolati: "It's a shame Cristy couldn't make it back to states again this year, but she had a great career here. She worked hard and made progress every year. This year, her leadership and attitude in the gym and with team was just great."

Jen Guiney - Freshman Floor/vault/ bars - Norwell

Guiney opened some eyes at the Pilgrim Conference 2 meet, taking first on the beam (7.8), second on the floor exercise (8.3) and third on the bars (7.4)...Pilgrim Conference All-Star for the floor exercise...her best event is the floor exercise, where she averaged an 8.45 score with a best of 8.55...is expected to assume Kristin Sheerin's role in the all-around with the Norwell-Cohasset team next winter (two per team)...trains year-round at the YMCA in Hanover...finished second in the YMCA Level 7 National YMCA championships in Ohio in July...averaged 8.0 in the vault, 7.95 on the beam and 7.4 on the uneven bars...also a very good soccer player at N.H.S. and a sprinter of the Spring track team...Cohasset-Norwell Coach Kara Connerty: "Jen is a natural athlete. You can see that. By training year round, she's really developing into a very good all-around gymnast, and I'm looking forward to watching her progress."

'Recycling teenagers'

Rapid growth continues for South Shore over-55 softball league

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

More and more resources are being recycled: glasses, plastics, paper products, etc.. Scituate's Jim Hyde is asking "Why not people?"

"We've found a pretty good market for recycling people the last few years," said a chuckling Hyde, who founded the South Shore over-55 men's softball league just two years ago, and has seen enrollment rise more than 500 percent in that time. Most conservationists can only dream of this kind of boon.

Hyde, 68, has even carried this recycling theme a step further, printing bumper stickers promoting the league that read "Recycling Teenagers."

Hyde, with the help of the Scituate Council on Aging, started to get the word out about a softball league in February of 2000, and opened the inaugural season that April with approximately 20 people, playing what amounted to pickup games behind the Gates Intermediate School in Scituate.

Hyde thanks COA Director Joan Wright and senior center activities director Mary Dean for continuing to get the word out about the league.

"Those two girls have been great," declared Hyde, reflecting his refreshingly "PC"-lean orientation.

"I mean those two women," he corrects, laughing.

Last year, in addition to rapidly expanding numbers, the league added uniforms, a travel team that goes all over Eastern Mass. seeking high-caliber competition, and a mailing list for paying league members.

The mailing list now exceeds 100, and Hyde is planning to put together four regular team rosters for play at two fields (Gates and the adjoining "Central Field") on Sunday and Wednesday mornings (10 a.m. starts). Plans are also in the works for regular showdowns with teams from a fledgling over-55 league in Quincy.

"I think when we first started, the guys were coming out to get in shape, but I think what really keeps them coming back is the camaraderie and competition," said Hyde. "We've got a lot of guys who are feeling good about themselves, and that's the most important thing.

"And they're telling their friends," he adds. "We're growing so fast, it's tough to keep up with it."

Not only has the league outgrown the Gates School field and town, it's also outgrown the season. Once a week all Winter, Hyde and a number of his more devoted teammates traveled to play indoor softball at the Bridgewater Sports Dome. In addition, the softball league spawned a winter bowling league.

In the inaugural season, there were a fair number of injuries, but Hyde reported that incidents such as these were "way down" this past year. He figures this effort was aided by the decision to bring out a few physical therapists from Magill and Gardner Physical Therapy, of Scituate.

"We've got a lot of guys whose bodies are in better shape than they were two years ago," he offered. "It's nice to think that we've helped a few people."

Magill and Gardner is also one of the many corporate sponsors the league has picked up, along with Janell Ford (Hanover), Jack Conway Real Estate, the Hingham Institute for Savings, Rockland Trust, South Coastal Bank and the Village Marketplace (Scituate).

This helps keep enrollment costs down. The fee per individual player is $20 for this season, which will run from April 1 to Sept. 30, or, according to Hyde, "until the first snow falls."

Hyde is hoping to attract at least another 20 players, which he says should assure having enough players to field two games on both Sundays and Wednesdays.

"Some of the young whippersnappers are still working, so they can't make the Wednesday games," Hyde cracks. "We'd like to make sure we have enough to get two games going."

Those interested in joining the South Shore over-55 softball league can call the Scituate Council on Aging (781-545-8722) or Jim Hyde (781-545-4681).

Race-by-the-Sea set for April 7

The 26th Cohasset Road Race-by-the-Sea has been scheduled for Sunday, April 7, 2002. The Cohasset Rotary Club will again sponsor the race.

The race is listed on the "Cool Running" Web site calendar (www.coolrunning.com). Information can be obtained on the race website www.cohassetroadracebythesea.com.

Applications are in the back of the Rotary Telephone Book for Cohasset. Runners can also register on the website. Applications will be at Curtis Liquors, Nobles, Cohasset Good Sport and other locations at the end of February beginning of March.

Organizers this year intend to use computer chips for timing.

April vacation baseball

The Cohasset Recreation Department is accepting registrations for a week-long baseball camp for youngsters age 8 through 12 at the Recreation office, First Floor, Cohasset Town Hall.

The South Shore Baseball Camp has been contracted again this year to provide an April Vacation Baseball Clinic, which will be held for one week, beginning Tuesday, April 16, through Friday, April 19, at Milliken field.

The clinic runs from noon to 2:30 p.m. and this week-long program will cost $100.

Boating safety course

The U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliary and the Cohasset Recreation Department will sponsor a four-session safe boating course, offering certification by both the Coast Guard and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The course will be offered to both youth and adults; however, certification in this course is mandatory for 16-year-olds and under, who wish to operate any horsepower craft. U.S.C.G.A. instructors will teach the four-session course, scheduled to begin Thursday evening, May 9, at Cohasset High School. Classes will meet each Tuesday and Thursday evening, from 7:30 to about 9 p.m., May 9 through May 23. Certification test will be held at the fifth and final class at 7:30 p.m., May 23.

To register, call the Cohasset Recreation Department office at 781-383-4109, as soon as possible, as class will be limited in size and participants will be enrolled on first-call basis. There will be a $35 per person fee for this program, which covers the cost of the text book and class materials.

While the class is designed for children/youth and adults, it is suggested that children age 12 and under be accompanied by a participating adult. A segment of the class will be devoted to the new laws regulating personal water craft.

Certification cards will be issued and most insurance companies will offer insurance rate discounts to those completing this course.

Girls basketball clinic

The Cohasset Recreation Department announces that telephone registration will be accepted for a girls basketball clinic to be held at Osgood School gym starting April 22 through May 20.

The clinic will meet each Monday, from 6 to 7:15 p.m. for grades three and four and 7:15 to 8:30 p.m. for grades five and six.

The fee for the five-week program is $40 per player. This program will be run by Ellen Carr, head coach of girls basketball at Cohasset High School.

whose difficulty has been compounded immeasurably by the fact that all practice sessions through this Wednesday have had to be held indoors due to inclement weather and perpetually poor drainage at Milliken Field. Knurek's charges have thus been forced to share time in Cohasset High's one gym with the other frustrated spring squads.

"We've probably had one-third the amount of practice time I'd liked to have had by this point," said Knurek Tuesday night. "Hopefully, we'll get some good weather the rest of the week. We really need to get outside. We're running out of time."

Indeed. The Skippers, who finished 6-14 last season, are scheduled to open the season next Saturday at Millis (10 a.m. start).

This sight will surely be missed this season: Nick Bolster on the mound for the Skippers.

South Shore League play starts a week from Monday, with the Skippers slated to host Norwell at Beechwood Field (3:30 start).

Many feel the SSL will be even more competitive this season, with Carver, Norton and Abington always being tough, Norwell and Hull appearing to be deeper than last season and perennially solid Mashpee and Harwich taking the place of Hanover.

"We've got our work cut out for us," concedes Knurek. "I think we could see six teams from our league making the state tourney, but I see us as being competitive."

When they're not pitching, Dooley will likely play third base and Snowdale second. Senior Robin Murphy will probably return to a starting role in the outfield, and be joined by junior Chris McKenna, a standout athlete who returns to the diamond after a one year absence.

Murphy hit .380 as a sophomore, but got off to a slow start at the plate last season and never seemed to recover, finishing with a disappointing .220 success rate. Knurek is hoping for a big rebound year from his senior.

"We moved Robin to the outfield last year, and he was great out there, but he never seemed to find his swing," reported the coach. "I'm looking for a big bounce back year from him, though. We know he's capable."

One of the problems with making Straughn the number one pitcher is he is also the team's best catcher.

A spot will also be found in the order for sweet swinging junior Matt O'Brien, who hit over. 300 last season and appears a prime candidate to bat in the all important number three spot in the order in front of cleanup man Straughn, who led the Skippers in hitting (.426) last season as well as RBI production.

Obviously, Straughn is the Skippers main man. It seems a foregone conclusion that more than a few college and pro scouts will stop by to check him out in person this season.

"I think Tim is someone who can definitely play at the next level," appraised Knurek. "He has a lot of the tools those folks are looking for."

The coach also makes it clear that Straughn is just as large an asset to his plans off the field as he is on it.

"It's great to see the way Tim has really emerged as a leader," he lauded. "He's always been extremely competitive, but he's really channeling that the right way now. You see it in the way he talks to the kids. He's helping them come along. He's really grown up a lot over the last few years."

Also likely to set the table in front of Straughn is the fleet-footed Dooley, probably in the leadoff spot.

Beyond this, however, Knurek admits he's given the batting order little thought.

The coach notes he is excited about the long term potential of freshmen Ted Straughn (Tim's brother) and Louis Blanco, but notes in the next breath how it usually takes freshman "most of their first year to adjust to the faster pitching at the varsity level ."

Matt Ogrodnick (sliding) is one of a handful of varsity returnees this season eyeing bigger and better things.

"I look at the players we have out and I feel like we'll be competitive," concluded the coach. "That's the big thing. In the last couple of years, we've seen a real winning tradition start to build here at Cohasset High with our sports teams with football, lacrosse, hockey, track, and a few others. Our athletes are taking a lot of pride these days, and that's something I think these (baseball) players are looking to be a part of."

Special Hitters' Workshop at SSBC in Hingham

The South Shore Baseball Club will be offering a special Hitters' Workshop, featuring veteran SSBC instructor Rick DelVecchio, during the April School Vacation for players aged 8-13 at its indoor facility in Hingham. Sessions will be conducted from 9-10:45 a.m., Tuesday through Friday, Apr. 16-19.

Hitters' Workshops have been designed to directly focus on hitting and improve all aspects of a player's hitting. Lectures and drills are intended to create habits that will give hitters what they need to succeed in games.

"Due to the popularity of our Hitters' Workshops with Rick over the December and February school vacations," SSBC president/director Frank Niles, Jr. explained, "we felt that we had to add one for the April school vacation. This one is really geared for youth league players. You never know how often fields around here will be playable in April because of rain and cold. Players can get their at bats and receive instructions from SSBC's professional staff at this Hitters' Workshop."

The Hitters' Workshop features daily hitting lectures, five different hitting stations, various skills work and drills, live hitting cage with pitchers, soft toss and bunting stations, two live hitting stations, and a safety station for inside pitches.

SSBC is a year-round, full service club and training facility for baseball and softball players, boys and girls, ages five and older, with locations in Holbrook and Hingham. Girls lacrosse squad seeks to improve on last year's 10-6 season

Sweeney volunteered to take the job for this season, and, as it turns out, his lack of experience with the sport has not really impeded his ability to effectively manage the squad. Also a veteran physical education teacher at CHS, Sweeney said he has been amazed at the overlap he has seen between girls lacrosse drills, and those he teaches in other sports.

"There is a tremendous amount of crossover," explained the coach. "We are just doing a lot of two-on-ones, four-on-threes, trying to create some open space in front of the net."

Open space in front of the net will be extremely hard to come by this season, especially for senior sniper Kristin Sheerin, a second year captain of the squad. Scoring her 100th goal in her junior year (100 goals is considered the gold standard in lacrosse, just as 1,000 points is in basketball), Sheerin expects to be under constant double teams, but will still most likely lead the team in scoring and assists again.

Senior captain Carlie Carter has received medical clearance from her doctor, allowing her to compete for the first time interscholastically since February of 2001.

Although she has been sidelined for a season of lacrosse, soccer and gymnastics, her athleticism and excellent stick skills should make her Cohasset's most dominant force on defense.

The third senior captain of the Lady Skippers is Kate Grimm, an extremely fast lefthander with a very accurate shot. She should provide a much needed consistent second scoring threat when Sheerin is held under wraps.

"They are just phenomenal," lauded Sweeney of his trifecta. "They are giving me a lot of input because I am new at this. Their leadership is just excellent."

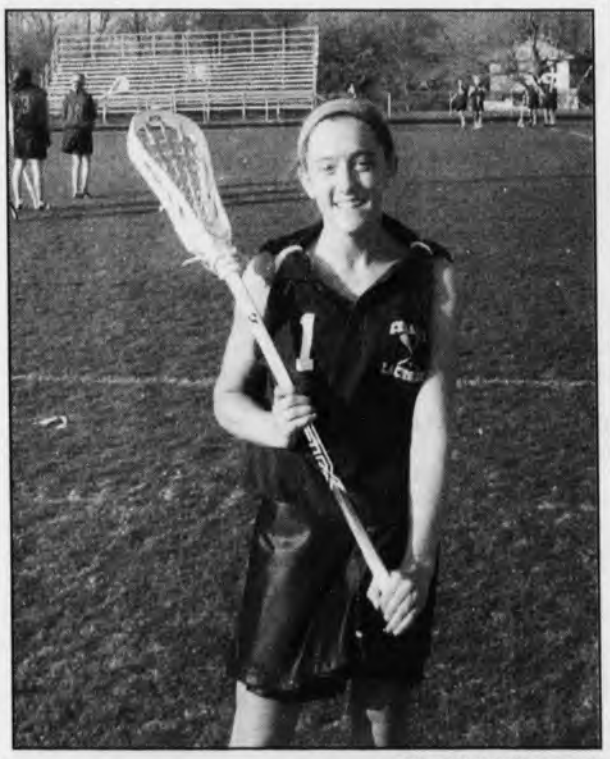
Helping Carter on defense will be the same speedy athletes as last year, juniors Katherine Coyne and Julie Lordan.

Behind the defense will be third year starter Gia Petrakis, a junior. Like Sheerin's offensive efforts, Petrakis is about to surpass a defensive milestone: she will tally her 500th career save within the first two games of the season.

Junior attacker Maura McKenney, a 20 goal scorer from a year ago, will provide an offensive spark for a team that appears to have a great balance of talent on offense.

"There have been so many that have surprised me that I can't name one," said a smiling Sweeney.

The Lady Skippers have a scrimmage slated for this Thursday against Scituate, a nice tune-up before they begin competitive play next week.



STAFF PHOTO/MIKE SPELLMAN

Kristin Sheerin, who is looking to add to her eye-popping 100-plus goal career, will no doubt draw a fair amount of double teaming this season.

Things have changed a bit for the Lady Skippers, but their sights are still set on the state playoffs.

Renewed interest, renewed sport rent 10th, ninth and eighth grades. Bostwick, who many know as the fall field hockey coach, has taken her 12 player JV roster, along with close to 20 Middle Schoolers and created her own "feeder program"— a vital element for the long term outlook.

The main drawback of creating or re-creating a sport at a school is that the team ends up with large numbers of players with limited or no experience at the sport. However, since nearly every member of the team is only one or two years removed from traveling and town leagues, that is not the case.

"We have a lot of work to do," stated Bostwick, "but we are better off than I imagined we would be."

Because of last week's rain, the team could not begin outdoor practice until this past Monday, mostly running through review drills of fundamentals.

Bostwick has said, though, that this year will be focused more on building up the program than winning.

"My main objective is to get the numbers up, and the talent up and build on that," said Bostwick, who went through the exact same process when she built Cohasset's field hockey team into the respected program it is today. "It will take us about three or four years."

Peraino, the only upperclassmen on the squad, has also been in this scenario: she was one of the four freshmen at the forefront of the movement to reinstate girls basketball. Peraino feels this can be the same type of rewarding experience.

"We don't look bad as a team considering the circumstances," offered the junior shortstop/pitcher. "It is fun. It's a challenge, but it is definitely a good opportunity too."

The team begins junior varsity play in two weeks, against the generally solid Norwell squad. The Lady Clippers and Abington are considered by many to be the two heavy hitters in the strong SSL this year, but that hasn't discouraged Bostwick.

"We have incredible support from [CHS Athletic Director] Ron Ford," she said. "People are now starting to pay attention to us, and we are hoping it is going to pay off."

Seniors consider housing options

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The lack of affordable housing for senior citizens in town has many worried. But the Senior Housing Committee is working to solve the problem.

To that end, the committee held a forum last week to talk about the issues. About two dozen seniors attended.

The primary issues discussed centered around the Accessory Dwelling Bylaw article on this year's Town Meeting warrant as well as a proposed future senior housing project near the Super Stop & Shop plaza.

The message of the meeting was to encourage seniors to get out and vote for the article on March 30 because it could be the first step in a long process.

"Everyone in this room needs to go out there and support this article," said Joseph Nedrow of the Cohasset Senior Housing Committee.

The bylaw would allow 10 home conversions a year by special permit from the Zoning Board. The bylaw, although not restricted to seniors, is seen as a potential benefit for elderly citizens who want to stay in their homes. They could rent out the apartment that is created in their home or live in it themselves. In addition to a number of conditions, the principal or accessory dwelling must be owner-occupied, have enough off-street parking and the principal dwelling must be at least 1,200 square feet.

"Not only would the article allow seniors to stay in Cohasset, but it could provide another vehicle for seniors to generate income," said Town Planner Liz Harrington.

Council on Elder Affairs director Kathy Bryanton, who is also a member of the senior housing committee, said people need to think about were they wish to retire. If Cohasset is their desired choice, then accessory dwellings could be the answer.

"I've never heard a negative comment about accessory dwellings. This is something that I think the town really needs to do."
— CEA director Kathy Bryanton

"I've never heard a negative comment about accessory dwellings," Bryanton said. "This is something that I think the town really needs to do."

Libby Zotos, a member of the senior housing committee, said one of the problems she previously had with the article is that the language was too vague. She said countless hours have been spent on writing the article to clear up any imprecise issues.

"What's happening is seniors have big and expensive homes with fixed incomes and taxes are going up," Zotos said. "It's driving the seniors out of town."

The other issues discussed at the meeting revolved around a senior housing project that the committee has been working on for some time. The housing committee is eyeing a 10-acre parcel of town-owned land near Stop & Shop as a potential development for 50 units of housing for seniors.

The seniors in attendance raised questions about the feasibility of the project to the timetable. One concerned Cohasset senior said she was very interested in seeing the project be developed.

"I want to stay in Cohasset as long as I'm able to," she said. "Both the article at Town Meeting and this housing project have all my support."

Access to the site could be through Cohasset Plaza rather than Red Fox Lane, which has no traffic light on 3A.

Nedrow said he has talked with plaza owner Donald Staszko who was open to the idea. He added there is currently an engineering study underway and right now the primary concern is dealing the financial aspects of the project.

"Our goal is to create a non-profit entity that would control the project," Nedrow said. "We want to keep the price as low as possible."

Nedrow said he didn't want to count on state and federal money because he felt that would restrict the committee's options.

"We would like to make sure Cohasset has preference with these units," he said. "I think if we got state money we may not have that luxury."

Nedrow said he has talked with the churches in town about the idea of having them control the property.

Church building celebrates centennial

New addition planned

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The building at 811 Jerusalem Road is celebrating its 100th anniversary and has a storied history. Now its current tenants hope to add to it, literally.

The Nativity of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church, occupants of the building since 1980, hopes to break ground on a new community center addition to the building in September.

The congregation has been undertaking the process for almost five years because of the need arising for more space. The church, which started with about 20 families, now has more than 10 times that amount and has been averaging one additional family a month for a few years.

"As we grow, we've seen the need for more resources," said Father John Maheras, minister for the church. "We're working to serve our congregates in a better fashion."

One of the main functions of the center will be to provide more class space for the Sunday school. The school now has more than 100 kids in the program and is in dire need of an expansion.

"There are parents who want their kids to have the religious and moral values we teach them at the school," Maheras said. "With the addition, will be able provide services to more children."

Maheras added many programs will be expanded as the church will try to accommodate new service for seniors, adults and teens.

"We try to serve people from the cradle to the grave," he said.

The Greek Orthodox Church understands the building's rich history and plans to have the addition fit in with the original architecture.

"The community center will be beautifully in concert with the original architecture," said Estelle MacDonald, vice president of the church. "It's going to fit in perfectly."

The building was originally named the Pope Memorial Church and was erected in 1900 by Colonel and Mrs. Albert A. Pope as a memorial to their son who died at the age of 18. According to the, "Narrative History of Cohasset, Volume II," Colonel Pope spent almost $300,000 on the building.

The former Pope Memorial Church (now The Nativity of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church) is 100 years old.

It is built with seam-faced Quincy granite with red roof tile which was imported from Italy. On the day the church was dedicated, July 8, 1900, the couple placed a portrait of their son in the cornerstone. A memorial to the family now stands at the entrance to the building.

Pope himself had an interesting life, he established the first bicycle factory in the country at Hartford, Conn. His company made the original Columbia bicycle which featured a huge front wheel and small rear one.

Maheras said the church is anxious to start the new project, which will be adjacent to the original building, but it is still in the fundraising stage. He added the church is looking to raise approximately $1.4 million and has already received about 1one-third of that amount.

"It's really going to be something for the entire community to enjoy," Maheras said. "It will be for religious education, cultural events and promoting community interaction."

Donna Rumble, who has been collecting donations at the church as its steward for five years, said people at the church have worked extremely hard on this project.

"We've had so many people donate countless hours to raising money and getting everything organized," Rumble said. "It's really a wonderful thing."

The church will be holding a fundraiser on April 14 at 3 p.m. It will be a voice and piano concert with the vocals sung by Evelyn Czaja and the piano played by Dr. Rita Simo. Czaja is the choir director an organist for the church.

Tickets are $25 for adults, $20 for seniors and $15 for children between the ages of eight and 12. Tickets can be purchased at the church, at the door, or by calling 781-282-6380.

College expo

The Social Service League of Cohasset and the Guidance Department are presenting a College Info Expo Tuesday, April 9, at 9 a.m. in the Cohasset High School auditorium for all sophomore and junior students and their parents. Guidance counselors or parents of children from other schools are welcome to attend.

Representatives from Boston University, Boston College and University of Massachusetts will comprise a panel of speakers to discuss how the college application and admission process works. There will be a question and answer period following the presentations.

For more information, call 781-383-0771.

System upgrades help fire flow, water quality

Fire protection and water quality have been improved throughout Cohasset because of water system improvements conducted last year, according to Water Commission Chairman John McNabb.

"Fire flows have been improved at fire hydrants, improving fire protection, on Beechwood Street, Elm Street, Summer Street, Rustic Drive, and Border Street," he said. "Because of our aggressive improvements program last year, where we improved almost two miles of water mains, including replacing undersized water mains and the cleaning and lining of other water pipes."

Water quality has also been improved.

"The cleaning and lining of water mains on Beechwood Street, Elm Street, and Summer Street removed accumulated sediment from the pipes."
— John McNabb, Water Commission

"The cleaning and lining of water mains on Beechwood Street, Elm Street, and Summer Street removed accumulated sediment from the pipes," McNabb said. "This has improved water quality not only in those areas but also throughout the entire distribution system."

McNabb noted that there are still other areas in the distribution system with inadequate fire flows, and that there are many other water system improvements that are needed.

These improvements, he said, were the latest in the Water Commission's aggressive water system improvements program. Since 1994, the Water Commission has improved more than 12 miles of the 36 miles of water mains in the distribution system, which has resulted in continued improvements in fire flows and water quality throughout Cohasset.

Tae-Bo is a real motivator

By Kevin Dykas
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Recently, a new Physical Education activity was taking place at the Osgood School and it happens to be called Tae-Bo! To many of the children, it was quite a "buzz word" around the school. Tae-Bo was created by seven-time World Martial Arts Champion Billy Blanks. Tae-Bo combines the martial arts, dance and boxing to create a total body workout. By putting it to music, Tae-Bo motivates children to a workout many have never felt before. Tae-Bo can help children to feel better about themselves, increase flexibility and endurance, be more athletic, and improve their overall health and cardiovascular fitness. Through all my years of teaching, I don't think there's a class that I have taught where the students move continuously for 30-35 minutes. By the smiles on their faces, they definitely enjoyed it as well.

My physical Education classes practiced Tae-Bo for approximately three weeks and during the last week, parents and families were invited into the school to either watch or participate in one of the Tae-Bo workouts. The turnout was overwhelming. It was so nice to have the support from many of the families here at Osgood. Many teachers have also participated or attended one their classes Tae-Bo sessions which shows the true dedication that they have to their students. I feel that Ta-Bo is an activity that will now be a part of the physical education curriculum here at Osgood for years to come.

To get a copy of the video tape entitled, "Tae-Bo Junior, it may be found on line at www.taebo.com or call toll free, 1-877-228-2326.

PE teacher Kevin Dykas teaches Tae-Bo to parents and children alike from Mrs. Cook's second-grade class.

First Read Aloud Day with elders is April 12

SCHOOL'S IN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

Schools In is here and we have a lot of things to share and talk about. It is wonderful to see how this column is growing and developing in so many ways. Please remember to send in all your news around the schools, events and photos by the third Friday of each month so that we may put it in this column. I cannot believe we are already at the beginning of April and only have three months left before summer. Let's hope for a warm and fun-filled Spring with lots of opportunities for learning in all areas!

The Osgood School is a fun and happening place to be these days. There is so much learning going on and the staff is so resourceful in the ways that they go about teaching the subjects. One of the areas that is especially fun and energizing for the students to be participating in is the physical education classes with Mr. Kevin Dykas and Mrs. JoAnne Lehr. Make sure to read the story on the Tae-Bo classes that were run recently.

Also adding to the curriculums being taught within the classrooms are the wonderful displays of artwork that the children do both in class and in their art classes. The school is just filled with bright and colorful walls of artwork and any parent who can should get to the school to see this. While you are there, you may hear the sounds of young voices preparing for the Arbor Day concert coming later this spring. To me, hearing the music through the mouths of children is a fantastic way to see all children come together to join as one. The way my children have been singing at home, I almost feel like I have been going to music class! It is awesome.

The Cohasset PSO Community Relations Committee and Cohasset Elder Affairs are happy to announce the very first Read Aloud Day to be held on April 12 at the Osgood School. Several senior citizens will be reading a wide range of top quality literature to the first, second and third grade students. These youngsters will enjoy hearing stories read to them by expert readers who will certainly have some words of wisdom to share as well.

Parents of students entering Kindergarten are invited to attend an orientation in the Osgood library during the evening of Wednesday, April 3 at 7 p.m. This informative program will include an overview of the kindergarten curriculum, an explanation of kindergarten screening and introductions of kindergarten teachers and support staff. Parents will also have an opportunity to hear about PSO and PAC and tours of the building and a visit to the kindergarten classrooms will be available.

The PSO Family Math and Science Night for grades K & 1 will be held on Thursday, April 4. This is such a fun and exciting evening for children and parents alike. Make sure to check your notes from school this week for more information.

Just a note to share with all parents of children in the Osgood School from the school nurses. Please do not send cough drops to school with your child unless they are delivered to the health office with a completed medication permission slip for the administration. Cough drops are not allowed anywhere in the school including in a child's backpack. There is a concern about safety and the choking risk associated with cough drops or lozenges outside of the health office environment. If you have any questions, please call Joan Kerrigan or Mary Mastromarino at 781-383-9054 or 9064.

Another note from the school in respect to the drop off and pick up procedures in place at the school. These procedures are put into place for the safety and well-being of all children who come in and out of the Osgood on a daily basis. Please remember this when you are dropping off or picking up your child and do not drop off or pick up where you are not supposed to be. The teacher parking lot is not for children at any time and should not be used by anyone trying to avoid the line or to save a few extra minutes. If you decide to drive your child or pick him/her up, you have to follow the rules with no exceptions! Also, there is to be no passing of the buses at all in the bus lanes and I can tell you from personal experience that those of you who choose to do this are risking the safety of children. Do not drop your child off in the front of the school either as this puts them at risk with the bus line and cars etc. If we could all just follow these rules at all times, it would not need to keep being talked about in this column or notices sent home from school.

The Cohasset PSO will hold its next Osgood meeting immediately following Math & Science Night on April 4. During the Math & Science Night, a PSO Job Fair will be held at the same time. This is a wonderful way to see what the PSO has to offer and what you can do to help. There are big jobs and little ones, jobs for mothers and fathers alike and it is a fun, rewarding and truly important way for you to stay in touch and informed with all that goes on in the school. Openings are available on the Executive Board of the PSO for President, Vice-President and Secretary. At the committee level, there are openings on Fund Raising, Special Events, Room Parent Grade Coordinators, Metco and PAC.

There are openings for School Council positions at each of the Cohasset schools for the upcoming(2002-2004)term. This is a two year commitment and you must have a child in the same school for the next two years to be eligible. Meetings are held monthly to discuss issues at each school and to develop the School Improvement Plan to be presented to the School Committee. If you are interested in running for one of these positions, please write a paragraph about yourself and why you would like to serve on the School Council and submit it to the following people no later than April 5: Osgood: Sarah Porter, 184 South Main St. Deer Hill: Susan Galligan, 31 Border Street and for the Middle/High School: Joan Allen, 41 Hillside Drive.

As you all know, in the next year and one half to two years, the third grade students will be moving to the Deer Hill and the Sixth Grade students will move to the Middle School when construction is complete. A School Reconfiguration Task Force has been formed and the representatives at the Osgood are Sarah Porter, Adrianne MacCarthy, Vicky Neaves and MaryBeth Carrier.

If you have any thoughts or ideas about the third grade move-up to Deer Hill, please contact one of those people.

The Deer Hill and Middle/High School are doing very well and are handling the construction at both schools beautifully. It is so exciting to see the changes happening and to know that our children will have such great places to learn and grow. As all of you know, the Middle/High School suffered the loss of Jesse Sargent recently. Thoughts and prayers are sent to Jesse's family and friends in this sad time and the fond memories that remain will stay forever strong of Jesse. The school staff, town officials and others who helped in dealing with this sad and emotional loss are to be commended.

Plans are already underway for the post prom party, 2002! This is the fifth year of a continuing parent and community effort to provide our seniors and their guests with a fun, safe, alcohol and drug-free event. The school administration has once again graciously provided post prom with the high school gym. It will miraculously be transformed into our "top-secret" theme on prom night. Past years have had the seniors "under the boardwalk", at the Mardi Gras, on a cruise ship and under the stars. There's dancing, prizes, plenty of food and all sorts of non-stop activities to help celebrate a memorable night. The party begins right after prom and continues till 5 am. Post prom party has been so successful that we have had a 95-100 percent attendance rate. The Cohasset Police support the parents and community in their effort to keep our kids safe and happy. Why not help the tradition grow?

The post prom party is truly a gift that the whole community gives our seniors. Become involved.....it's fun, creative, you'll meet new people and it is rewarding! For more information, call Jeanne Quigley at 781-383-1573

The Cohasset PSO is gearing up for next year and is hoping to have a lot of new faces along with the old. The PSO is an organization that is open to everyone within the school community and is such a beneficial and rewarding experience on all levels. Fathers and mothers are encouraged to take an active part in the schools through the PSO. Web sites are becoming a vital part of the PSO communication and you can log on at www.cohassetpso.org for more information. Also available on the site is "Cohasset Classifieds" where you can place ads for items that need a new home whether it be clothing, household furniture or goods, sporting equipment and more. You can also request items that you may be looking for in your home. Make sure to check it all out and come join in the fun with the PSO.

That is all the news for this month. Have a great month in April and look forward to the column at the end of the month.

Bush may run for second spot

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Hingham is no stranger to having hometown representation in the executive branch of state government.

The South Shore town with its rich history boasts two former state governors, John Davis Long, who later became Secretary of War under President McKinley and John Albion Andrew, the Civil War governor, whose black 54th Massachusetts Regiment was the focus of the feature film "Glory."

Now could Jamie Bush — the cousin of President George. W. Bush and nephew of former President George H. W. Bush — also make the Hingham history books?

It's likely the South Shore along with the rest of the state will find out today, when Jamie Bush of Cottage Street, is expected to make an announcement about whether he's in the race for the Republican Party nomination for lieutenant governor.

In an interview Tuesday, Bush said he may throw his hat into the ring for the number two spot. Other candidates include millionaire businessman James Rappaport and Gov. Jane Swift's pick, former Melrose mayor Patrick Guerriero. Bush said Mitt Romney's decision to run has infused excitement into the race for Republicans to retain control of the executive branch.

Jamie Bush with his daughter Sarah at a Republican gathering in Cohasset in August 2002.

"It's a tremendous opportunity because of Romney's candidacy to break out of the doldrums as a political party," Bush said. "It's an opportunity to grow and reach out in areas that we haven't been in 30 years."

Bush, 46, who's married with two children, says his great interest in urban issues coupled with Romney's "tremendous skills in governance and running things and turning things around" would be a good combination.

"I think we'd be a good team," he said.

Bush, who is a former social worker, started the non-profit "I Have a Dream Foundation" that shepherded fourth-graders from an elementary school in Dorchester through college or their post-secondary education.

"It's a tremendous opportunity because of Romney's candidacy to break out of the doldrums as a political party."
— Jamie Bush

Also a financial services consultant with his own company, Bush says now that the Dorchester kids are nearly all through school – he has the time to devote to a political campaign.

Bush doesn't think it's too late to garner 15 percent of the delegates at the April 6 Republican convention in Lowell.

"There's time if the 3,500 delegates want a third option," he said, adding he'd be looking for considerably more than the required 15 percent to get on the primary ballot.

Bush said he has talked with Romney about his running for lieutenant governor.

"He's decidedly non-committal (about a running mate) with the possibility of changing his mind for someone special," Bush said.

Don Hussey, chairman of the Hingham Republican Town Committee, said it would be exciting to have Bush in the race, but he thinks with only days left before the convention, it may be too late to muster the necessary support. Bush would also have to get thousands of signatures by the end of May to get his name on the ballot.

"The process of getting signatures takes significant time and is labor intensive," Hussey says. "If he can get the state committee to put together a field effort on his behalf he might be able to do it.

"But it's still an almost impossible task."

But Republican State Committee Vice Chairman Polly Logan of Cohasset thinks otherwise.

She said she's heard of two other potential candidates for lieutenant governor that may jump in.

"I've always been a fan of Jamie Bush," she says. "I'm so impressed with what he's done in the inner city helping kids."

Logan said she also thinks Bush's Washington connections would be a plus.

Cantwell bows out of state senate race

By Gregory Mathis
GMATHIS@CNC.COM

Former Marshfield selectman and Assistant District Attorney Jim Cantwell announced Tuesday he will not be a candidate for State Senator in the upcoming state election.

Cantwell, a partner in the firm of Graeber, Davis, with offices in Quincy, Marshfield, and Falmouth, was the Democratic challenger to State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, in the fall 2000 state elections. Hedlund defeated Cantwell by just more than 3,000 votes in the eight-town district that includes Marshfield, Weymouth, Cohasset, Duxbury, Hingham, Scituate, Braintree and Hull. Cantwell defeated Marshfield resident Ted LeClair, a former Naval officer, in the Democratic primary in September 2000.

Cantwell, a Weymouth resident, cited personal and professional reasons for not running in the upcoming election. He said his baby deserves the attention of his father and he's excited about the responsibilities of his partnership in the law firm.

"At this time in my life, I must say my priorities have changed — at least for the short term," Cantwell said. "My wife, Jen, and I are caught up in the excitement of raising our young son, and I have a new set of responsibilities, both to my partners and to our clients, in our expanding law firm here on the South Shore."

Cantwell, however, did not rule out a run for public office at some other point.

"Politics is something I've been interested in my whole life," Cantwell said. "I love politics, I love public service."

For now, Cantwell said he will focus on his job, family and some other community projects he would like to work on, including the next phase of the restoration of the Daniel Webster estate in Marshfield. Cantwell, a member of the Democratic State Committee, having been elected to represent eight communities of the South Shore, said he would stay active in the Democratic party and help others get elected.

Hedlund said Cantwell's announcement will not alter his plans for the upcoming campaign.

"I'm always going to get an opponent," Hedlund said, a resident of Weymouth. "I've learned there's no sense in worrying about who I may or may not have as an opponent. The best tack I can take is continue working hard for the people I represent."

Hedlund said, "Jim added a lot to the debate. He was a formidable candidate, but that doesn't change where my focus has always been on working hard for the people I represent."

One likely opponent will be LeClair, who said it must have been a difficult decision for Cantwell.

"I think it's a very hard decision for him to make," LeClair said. "We've been friendly competitors for three years politically and I for one am one of the few people who can appreciate what a painful decision this is for him and his supporters. I feel for him."

LeClair said he hasn't yet thought of how Cantwell's withdrawal will affect his campaign.

"I'm more thinking about Jim. I know this is a big decision for him. Maybe a week from now I can give some thought as to how this changes things for me."

Jim Cantwell

Cantwell said it was an "an incredible professional honor to be the Democratic nominee" in the 2000 election.

"Being involved in such an exciting election was a great honor," he said. "I sincerely appreciate the exceptional support of family and friends during the election process, and will always remember how proud I was to represent this region as a Democrat," Cantwell said.

April 30 is the deadline for candidates to announce for the September primary and November general election.

Cantwell is inviting family and friends to two "Thank You" receptions over the next week: tonight (Wednesday) from 6 to 8 p.m. at the Lobster Tale Restaurant in Marshfield, and Thursday, April 4, from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Weymouth Elks Hall.

Bradley recognized as Legislator of the Year

State Rep. Garrett J. Bradley, D-Hingham, has been awarded by The Massachusetts Boating and Yacht Clubs Association Legislator of the Year. Past recipients of the award include Congressman Stephen Lynch, and Former State Representative of the Third Plymouth District Mary Jeanette Murray.

Bradley was chosen for the award because he best exemplifies the objectives of the association. Those objectives are to encourage safe yachting, seamanship and navigation, and to mainly monitor and report on proposed legislation affecting the boating public.

"I am very happy to receive this award," said Bradley. "My entire district is on the coast therefore I look forward to addressing issues affecting boaters during my tenure in office."

Candlelight service

Saint Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Ave. will celebrate the Great Vigil of Easter, a candlelight service on Saturday, March 30, 7:30 p.m. The worship is dramatic, beginning with the church in darkness. Candles are lit and at the moment when resurrection is proclaimed the lights are turned on signifying that the resurrected Jesus is the light that no amount of darkness can overcome.

Worship Easter morning, Sunday, March 3l, will be at 8 a.m. with quartet and brass and 10 a.m. with full choir and brass. Both services, Eucharist with sermon, will be in the church.

Prior to Easter, there will be worship in the church on Maundy Thursday, March 28, at 7:30 p.m. This Eucharist commemorates the last supper and the importance of community for the church's life together in Christ. Following the Eucharist will be a simple meal of foods typical of Jesus' place and time breads, cheese, olives, nuts, fruits, and milk and honey.

A 24-hour, Prayer Watch will begin on Maundy Thursday at 3 p.m. Parishioners sign up for an hour throughout the day to be in church to read, pray, just to be quiet, or meditate. It recalls Jesus' words at Gethsemane, "So, could you not watch with me one hour?" and the words of Psalm 130: "my soul waits for the LORD more than those who watch for the morning, more than those who watch for the morning." It is a powerful experience of prayer each minute throughout the day bringing the church into Good Friday.

Good Friday worship begins at noon on March 29, with an hour of quiet. The Prayer Book liturgy begins at 1 p.m. A service for children takes place at 2:30 p.m. and ends the traditional three hours of worship while Jesus was on the cross. A number of parishioners will participate A the 20 mile Good Friday walk raising money to assist economically poor areas of the south, particularly in rural Mississippi.

ADL to host seder

The Anti-Defamation League announced it will host the 7th Annual South Shore Family Interfaith Seder at Congregation Sha'aray Shalom in Hingham on April 7 at 3 p.m. Rabbi Steven Karol will lead the Seder, assisted by colleagues from the Hingham-Hull Religious Leaders Association.

This year's Seder will focus on the South Shore's participation in the ADL's No Place for Hate program. Guest speaker and ADL executive director, Robert Leikand will discuss the relevance of Passover to all faiths and the significance and impact of the No Place for Hate campaign. Seder participants will have the opportunity to learn more about what local communities are doing to encourage and support tolerance and what it takes to become a certified No Place for Hate community.

"The fact that the Seder is so well attended every year by people of all faiths is one very strong example of how sharing religious practices and discussions establishes and reinforces tolerance," said Barbara Marcus, co-chairman of the ADL's South Shore Advisory Committee. "The participation of the various clergy in our area and the involvement of people of different faiths in preparing the Seder is the type of awareness and synergy we hope to achieve on a regular basis in our communities and throughout the world."

The Anti-Defamation League, founded in 1913, is the world's leading organization fighting anti-Semitism and other forms of bigotry through programs and services that fight hate, building bridges of understanding and safeguard liberty.

Route 3A repaving

Police Chief Robert Jackson said motorists travelling on Route 3A can expect delays due to the current repaving project along the state highway from the Hingham line to Beechwood Street. The project, which started at 7 a.m. Monday, is expected to last two weeks.

"People may want to see alternative routes," Jackson said.

The contract calls for excavation, minor drainage work and resurfacing excavated areas.

Bernard McCourt, MassHighway district director, said once the work is completed, any project that requires excavation within the road limits, such as utility work, will not be allowed for five years.

Fiona and John Owen celebrate the opening of their South Shore Art Center exhibit "A Green and Pleasant Land." The husband-wife artists will celebrate their 25th wedding anniversary next month.

British invasion

English artists show their 'Green and Pleasant Land' at SSAC

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

It is a portrait of the traditional, mythological England. The England of stately, bucolic imagery that many Americans and much of the rest of the world have envisioned from distant perspectives.

It's also the green and pleasant land where poet/prophet William Blake once vowed to build Jerusalem, until when he would "not cease from mental fight/Nor shall my sword sleep in my hand."

The "Jerusalem" that Blake envisioned in the early 19th century is even more mythological than the gentile and pastoral English lands that he was surveying at the time.

"The Owens' work just seems to carry a special appeal and invite more scrutiny."
Monica McKenney of the South Shore Art Center

But this England is alive and well for British husband-wife artist team John and Fiona Owen, who convey eloquently their self-described celebration of the country's gardens and rural life in "A Green and Pleasant Land," an exhibition of lush and luminous painting works on display at Cohasset's South Shore Art Center through April 14.

John and Fiona Owen, who will be celebrating their 25th wedding anniversary in April, spend their summers travelling in England, Italy and Greece to sketch and photograph the varieties of gardens and rural scenes. The painting is done during the winter months back home, in a studio villa built from a converted chapel in the town of Cotswolds in Gloucestershire, some 100 miles west of London in England.

John Owen's works are mainly landscape scenes reminiscent of the British Victorian painters. The 46-year-old artist seeks in his images to, in his words, reflect the different moods of a singular scene with varying colors and light, an approach which the artist also mentions owes as Live at the Yard Rock!

Racky Thomas Band hosts release party for CD recorded at Quincy club

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

One of the long-running traditions among blues artists is the self-defining, bona fide classic live album.

B.B. King has "Live at the Regal" (1964), Muddy Waters had "Live at Newport," 1960 and for singer/guitarist Jimmy Reed it was "Live at Carnegie Hall" (1962). On a more recent and local level, Boston's now-disbanded The Radio Kings traveled to Memphis to come out with "Live at B.B. King's" in 1995.

Now one of Boston's most popular and critically praised current blues groups, The Racky Thomas Band, has joined this unique fray, and done so by capturing their in-concert experience at one of the unlikeliest of venues — right on their own turf at Quincy's funky, roadhouse-style club The Yard Rock.

For the official release party of their new "Live at the Yard Rock" CD, the Thomas Band will appropriately enough return to the scene of the crime when it plays at the friendly, Shipyard-based blues joint this Friday evening (March 29) at 8 p.m.

The band is led by singer/harpist/songwriter Racky Thomas, a charismatic thirty-something frontman whose "rootsy" vocal and harp-wailing style, many have said, seems to come from another blues era. The rest of the regular RTB quartet lineup is filled by guitarist Nick "The Professional" Adams, bassist and Quincy native Todd Carson and drummer Jon Ross, while the band for its new live disc and Friday's release party is augmented by pianist Jeremy Berlin and saxophonist Gordon Beadle, who are among a rotation of guest players that Thomas and crew use for their live gigs.

"I remember the vibe in the club being electric; there was a special magic in the air, and the enthusiasm of the audience was infectious. It really brought out the best in the band," says Thomas in his jacket notes on the in-concert disc.

"Some of it had to do with the ambience of the Yard Rock, with its rustic wooden floors and support beams and intimate, dimly-lit atmosphere. But a lot of how the CD sounds has to do with our sound engineer, Ron Schultz, who managed to catch the whole thing on his own mobile unit and really did an excellent job," Thomas said.

In further describing the two February, 2001 evenings that occasioned the recording of the live disc, Thomas noted, "We'd just finished recording our previous CD (2000's Troubled All the Time) and were playing one of our regular dates at the Yard Rock when (Yard Rock owner) Joe Hajjar approached us with the idea of recording a live disc there, adding that he was surprised that in all the years he'd been featuring blues at the club, no one had ever recorded a live show for disc release there. My first reaction was that I thought it was a good idea. But I have to say that the band and I weren't sure at first what the results were going to be and we went into the project with some trepidation. But as it turned out, the disc is much better than we expected."

Live at the Yard Rock lives up to Thomas's descriptions. Before an enthusiastic and blues-committed Yard Rock audience, the Thomas Band demonstrates the musical chops and versatility that has won its rep as one of Boston's best live blues bands, with influences ranging from classic Chicago and Texas-style guitar-blues to New Orleans second-line piano stomps to jazzy, Kansas City jump-swing.

A few of the disc's twelve tracks are well-chosen, old-school covers, such as the suddenly-relevant-again hard-times shuffle "The Hustle Is On" and B.B. King's "Please Love Me." But the best songs are the band's own cooked-up efforts, such as Thomas's high-powered "Sweet Dough Baker," Carson's steady-rollin' "Don't Treat Me Like That" and, perhaps most impressive, the ten-minute, slow-burn blowout "Can't Win For Losin'," where guitarist Adams, jazzing it up on a hollow-body '53 Silvertone for most of the set, rips the roof off with some nitro-charged, hard blues soloing on Fender Telecaster.

The Racky Thomas Band is one of the nominees in the Best New Blues Act category at this year's Boston Music Awards, taking place on April 11 at the Orpheum Theatre. The band is also playing a return date at Plymouth's Ricky T's on April 20 and will make its debut at Hull's Sea Note on June 7.

Second time's the charm

The Rookie (B)

Beware the cinema "based on" come-on, as in "A Beautiful Mind" is "based on" the life of John Forbes Nash or "Jefferson in Paris" is really based on Jefferson in Paris, and others numerous enough to mention all day. The actors are always prettier, the polarities more fixed, the crises more defined and dramatically resolved, the tears flow more picturesquely and the conclusions are pat. Those of us who revere America's greatest 20th century president fear that if Hollywood makes "The Calvin Coolidge Story," "based on" his life, he will choose to run in 1928.

That said, "The Rookie," "based on" a chapter in the life of a guy named Jim Morris, is heartwarming — and flee not to the loo for relief; this won't evoke the cynic in you — and close enough to the facts to pass muster. Here's a story about America's second favorite pastime. The first, of course, is the world's favorite pastime and anybody can play, but as with the first, the second is played more successfully by the young. Jimmy was not young, at least not young for baseball, yet he got a second chance at something passed up earlier in life, for reasons perhaps but probably not entirely straightforwardly told in the movie. And we get a chance, owing to Dennis Quaid's ingratiating performance, to enjoy that second chance with him.

The son of a military man, moved all around and landing in dinkwater Texas, Jimmy wound up married (Rachel Griffiths plays his wife) with three kids, coaching high school baseball and teaching science. Everybody liked Jimmy, except maybe his dad (Brian Cox, whose performance in "L.I.E." deserved an Oscar nomination but didn't get it; I put in a plug hoping that you'll rent "L.I.E" and see what you missed). Jimmy doesn't like dad much either: too many years being dealt with as if he were a soldier serving under dad instead of dad's son.

Whether any of that dad and son stuff has real tangents to Jimmy's true story, I know not. And what may or may not be true is that Jimmy's high school team, here seen as hopeless, struck a bargain with him: We'll do so well we'll win the state championship if, should we do so, you'll try out for minor league baseball pitching again. So, guess which high school team does brilliantly and which high school coach tries out for pro ball. Golly, you're smart.

That's it: Jim pitches like a bat out of hell (pardon the mixed metaphor), he's amazing, soon enough he winds up with what in the cold hard calculus of reality is almost never known to happen: a late vocation in pro ball, late in his life or in anyone's trying to begin in baseball. It's a rip-roaring story, it has a lovely climax and sweet coda, it sends you out smiling.

The games are snazzily done, both the school and pro games, and the supporting players augment Quaid nicely, especially (aside from Griffiths and Cox), Angus T. Jones as Jimmy's sturdy

Bavarian Cream from a blender

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Bavarian cream is an almost-set stirred custard of gelatin, sugar, milk, whole eggs and vanilla into which is folded whipped cream. It is chilled, unmolded, and the usually served with fruit. Flavor variations are numerous including lemon and orange. The problem? This recipe requires the making of a stovetop custard which is time consuming and not without its problems. I wondered if there was a quick and easy technique to get a similar result.

I started with a recipe from James Beard which called for separated eggs, with the yolks forming the custard and the whites (optionally) folded in at the end, after the cream. The texture of the pudding without egg whites was excellent—firm, creamy, with an appealing "matte" finish—but it lacked flavor. The pudding with egg whites had the texture of mousse—it was too light and fluffy. A second test was a recipe from the Internet and was similar to Beard's recipe except that it also used cornstarch and vanilla ice cream was added at the end. The result was unappealing to say the least, producing a dense, pasty texture. Moving on, I tried an unusual recipe from Bon Appetit from 1984. Gelatin is softened in a blender and then boiling water, flavorings, sugars, eggs, salt, and whipping cream are added and everything is blended on high speed for 2 or 3 minutes. Crushed ice is added at the end and then the mixture is poured into a mold. This pudding had the smooth, glossy finish of the Bavarian Creams pictured in old cookbooks but it was relatively dense and thick, not as light as those with either whipped cream or cream with beaten egg whites folded in. This was clearly a wiggly, somewhat spongy, "gelatin" dessert and was, without a doubt, the easiest recipe to make so far. Since it was so easy and also delicious, I decided to refine the recipe.

The recipe called for lemon juice and zest but I wanted a simpler master recipe and therefore simply used water and increased the vanilla to 2 teaspoons. I fiddled with the amount of blending that was required and found that if under-processed, the cream would not set up properly and was difficult to unmold. I made a third recipe and processed the mixture for a full 3 minutes once the cream was added. The results were quite good, producing a firm but not tough Bavarian cream that was easy to unmold and which held its shape nicely.

MASTER BLENDER RECIPE FOR BAVARIAN CREAM

This Bavarian cream takes only 10 minutes to prepare and the results are very good if not as rich and light as a more traditional recipe for this dessert. Note that if you use a metal mold, it is best not to let it sit overnight since the metal can discolor the dessert as it sits. Also beware that this recipe uses uncooked eggs which always entails some health risk. If you have problems unmolding, dampen a kitchen towel with hot water and place over the bottom of the bowl for a few seconds to loosen.

1/4 cup cold water
2 envelopes unflavored gelatin (4 teaspoons)
1/2 cup boiling water
1 cup granulated sugar
1 cup heavy cream
3 eggs
1/4 teaspoon salt
2 teaspoons vanilla
1 cup crushed ice
Fresh berries for serving

Add cold water to a blender and then sprinkle with gelatin. Let stand until softened, about 5 minutes. Add boiling water; blend just until gelatin is dissolved. Add sugar, cream, eggs, and salt; blend at high speed 3 minutes. Add vanilla and ice, and blend until ice has melted. Pour into 4-cup ring mold and chill until set, about 4 hours. Unmold onto serving platter and surround with fresh berries.

Serves 6 to 8

LEMON OR ORANGE VARIATION

little boy, his constant companion, and as one of the high school jocks, Jay Hernandez, who shone in "crazy/beautiful" and with a starring role or two may be the new new Hispanic "thing" on screen. Quaid, an actor who gets better with age, lights up the screen with every role. Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 27

Yesterday's planetary influences affect today as well. A 90-degree alignment of the sun and Jupiter culminates at 8:24 am. Don't be too hasty in your judgments or too keen to commit yourself. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action for a few days. Zero in on jobs you have been putting off and get them out of the way. The Virgo moon opposes Mercury at 8:31 p.m. and becomes inactive.

THURSDAY, MARCH 28

As full moons go, today's features more positive aspects than negative. It will certainly generate high energy and can bring about exciting events or situations. Avoid rigid time schedules and plans. Expect the unexpected. The moon enters Libra at 1:04 a.m., and the full moon culminates at 1:25 p.m., 8-degrees of Libra/Aries. As the day goes on, the Libra moon forms harmonious contacts to Saturn, Neptune and Pluto. An applying alignment of Venus and Uranus may spark romantic passions this evening. This is a perfect night to socialize, meet people, begin new relationships.

FRIDAY, MARCH 29

The backside of yesterday's full moon continues to generate high spirits. The planet Mercury enters Aries at 9:45 a.m. At this time the green light goes on for launching new enterprises, in your business or personal life. Venus and Uranus align at 7:23 p.m. In addition, the Libra moon forms major contacts to Venus and Uranus until 7:57 p.m., when it becomes inactive. This combination highlights all social gatherings and romantic rendezvous. Don't be a hermit tonight. Forget your troubles and go for the good times.

SATURDAY, MARCH 30

The moon enters Scorpio at 12:21 a.m., generating a more serious, subdued mood today and tomorrow. It is okay to launch new activities before 11:34 a.m., when the moon forms a harmonious contact to expansive Jupiter. The moon interacts with Neptune at 5:16 p.m., bringing a lull period. Take extra quiet time out for yourself. Applying alignments of the sun to Saturn and Neptune also affect the evening. Prayer and meditation can help you to gain key insights and find new meanings in life.

SUNDAY, MARCH 31

Start this day with a peaceful, positive attitude. The Scorpio moon forms potentially difficult alignments to Mars in the morning and Uranus this evening. Keep a low profile. Don't force issues. Others may be moody, combative, temperamental. Pursue activities that help you to relax and maintain perspective. At 9:13 p.m. the Scorpio moon becomes inactive for the remainder of the evening.

MONDAY, APRIL 1, 2002

Planetary influences in April promise a fast-paced, exciting month. You can make great strides toward personal or professional goals. Today the moon enters exuberant Sagittarius at 1:48 a.m. Venus enters Taurus at 1:40 a.m., remaining there until April 25. Saturn forms a flowing 120-degree contact to Neptune. In addition, a 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Jupiter affects the day. Enjoy the show. However, don't go to extremes, make foolish promises, impulsive purchases.

TUESDAY, APRIL 2

A lunar alignment to Pluto at 8:27 a.m. can make for a rough start. Take your time. Sidestep emotional thunderstorms. Fortunately, this influence passes over by midmorning, and the remainder of the day rates high across the board. The green light goes on for new starts in business or romance. Pull out all the stops. The Sagittarius moon continues to generate optimism, enthusiasm. Be sure to take time out for fun and games.

The rites of springtime

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Clusters of satiny purple and white crocus blossoms glisten in the warm afternoon sunshine along my garden path as dainty nodding blooms of snowdrops dance in the gentle breeze against a backdrop of finely textured, deep green foliage provided by a winter heath, Erica carnea 'December Red'. The heath's showy spikes bearing pretty purplish-pink bells have been in bloom since mid-February. Nearby, the equally persistent, yellow-fringed blossoms of the witch hazel 'Arnold Promise' continue to create a lemon chiffon cloud alongside my water garden more than a month after they first appeared. Throughout the garden, bulbs and perennials are coming to life now that the spring season has officially arrived.

Spring cleaning the yard and gardens is always a first priority. Despite my best intentions, many of my borders were not clipped, raked and weeded last fall and winter storms scattered leaves and debris throughout. As bulbs and perennials emerge, it becomes more and more difficult and time-consuming to remove this litter. Although it is best to avoid treading on soggy soils as this may lead to compaction which eliminates the air in the soil essential for healthy root systems, this season's dry conditions should allow for the cleanup process to begin at once.

As I begin clipping and raking, a plump bunny dashes away, leaving behind the remnants of a broad expanse of crocuses that look as if they had been trimmed by a lawn mower. Hoof prints embedded deep in the soft earth suggest deer have shared in the decimation and barely a bloom remains, but here and there, the first deep blue flowers of scillas have emerged to provide spring cheer. Hundreds of these charming Siberian squill have naturalized beneath my Heritage birch creating a heavenly blue carpet that serves as a colorful contrast to the early yellow daffodils. As their foliage declines, the broad leaves of hosta will help to conceal their yellowing leaves.

Handsome hellebores are on the verge of joining the floral display in the shady border. All winter, the bear's foot hellebore, Helleborus foetidus, displayed clusters of large, pale green buds above dark, divided evergreen foliage which have gradually unfurled to reveal their intriguing green, bell-shaped flowers. The elegant white blossoms of the Christmas rose, H. niger, are beginning to unfold atop rigid, fleshy stems. As their silky, white petals age, they gradually acquire tints of dusty rose. Nearby, a large clump of its cousin, the Lenten rose (H. orientalis) is on the verge of bursting into bloom with dozens of mauve, saucer-shaped flowers which persist for weeks amid its glossy, leathery, evergreen foliage. Several new hybrid hellebores expand the color range of these long-lived perennials offering blossoms in shades of pink, purple and white.

It is never too early to begin the never-ending chore of pulling weeds. Experienced gardeners may be able to identify numerous varieties but even a novice should be able to recognize dandelions and grasses which are easier to extricate at this time of year while surrounding plants are just beginning to appear and the soil is loose and workable. As the season progresses, weed removal becomes more challenging as perennials grow and expand often hiding dandelions and their allies which soon flower and start spreading seeds and offspring all over the garden. The secret to a reasonably weed-free garden is to weed early and often before seeds are produced and then to spread a layer of mulch to reduce further germination. When in doubt, it may be worth leaving unidentified seedlings in place and closely monitoring their development as these may be forgotten perennials or chance seedlings from desirable annuals and perennials that can be transplanted later this spring.

Deciduous trees and shrubs should be transplanted as soon as possible before their leaves appear, especially soft-barked trees, such as magnolias, cherries, birches and dogwoods which should only be moved in spring. Broad-leafed evergreens, including rhododendrons, mountain laurels and andromedas, are also best transplanted at this time of year.

Lawns will benefit from a firm raking to remove dead grass that accumulated over the winter, but wait until the soil surface is reasonably dry to prevent tearing grass plants out of the earth. For sparse lawns, overseed after raking to promote a thicker, denser turf. A thick, healthy lawn is the best way to minimize weeds. Spread lime to maximize the lawn's ability to absorb nutrients from the soil. Aerate heavy, compacted soils.

As dusk approached and I hauled one last tarp overflowing with garden refuse to the compost pile, sure indicators of spring's arrival were everywhere. The resonating tones of spring peepers drifted on the breeze from nearby wetlands accompanied by the noisy chatter of red-winged blackbirds that had gathered in flocks among the branches of the steel gray-colored catkins of the pussy willows along the brook. I dreamed of the gardens in bloom and realized how much I enjoy living in the Northeast where the landscape changes so dramatically each season. Despite Mother Nature's unpredictability, I cannot imagine living anywhere else as I eagerly await the magical rebirth of our woodlands and meadows and I look forward to the beauty that will unfold in my gardens during the weeks to come.

British invasion

much to the French Impressionists as to his main English influences. Owen's idyllic scenes of gardens, meadows, riverbanks and winding cobblestone paths are rendered mainly on smaller-framed canvases, with which the artist said working comes more naturally.

"I find that as an artist, I don't always have control. Things evolve with the changing colors and light," he said. "But my main interest is light, and its effect at any given time and place. I like to capture the atmosphere and spirituality of a place, and give the viewer a sense of being there, rather than outside."

Fiona Owen also creates smaller-canvas works but with titles of quotes drawn from classic British poetry by writers such as Blake, John Dunne and Milton, in contrast to the blunt, plain-stated subject titles of her husband's pieces. Her work itself is also more conceptual, with an abstract approach of inserted framed-images within framed-images conveying zoom-in, zoom-out perspectives of the overall scene.

"Inspiration through poetry is an important part of my creative process," said Owen, 44, in her artist's statement. "I am particularly drawn to poets who, through the ages, seek and celebrate the 'genius loci' — the spirit of place." The artist describes her approach as within the traditions of illumination, combining watercolor images and panels gilded with 22 carat English gold leaf. Sometimes, the more detailed viewpoints within the frames and borders reveal plants and animals to create dreamlike, Celtic-inspired tapestries.

Together, the Owens' work has garnered its share of recognition back home. Along with London's Royal Academy of Art, Medici Galleries and other venues, the couple's paintings have graced the private collections of Prince Charles and the late British stage and screen actor David Niven.

SSAC co-director Monica McKenney notes that "A Green and Pleasant Land" has so far been an even greater attraction than usual at the gallery.

"More people have been coming into the gallery just on word-of-mouth about the show, and they've been staying longer viewing and observing all the different pieces. The Owens' work just seems to carry a special appeal and invite more scrutiny," McKenney said.

Community preservation proposals win voters' OK

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The aging Sullivan gymnasium at the middle-high school provided the setting for the town's first experiment with the Community Preservation Act, adopted at the ballot box a year ago.

The old sports hall, which hosted its last Town Meeting this week, will fall to the wrecking ball later in the year as part of the school renovation, expansion project.

But with sports banners heralding countless Skipper victories over the years hanging from its walls, the old gym housed historic debate over Cohasset's initial expedition into the new state law that matches town funds collected through a 1.5 percent property tax surcharge with state monies. The discussion that went on for some two hours ended with a mandate from the voters.

As a result, ball fields, two historical society museums and the town's open space rolls could all stand to benefit from money accumulated under the new law.

"The money must be spent on furthering the CPA, not on the Big Dig."
— Stuart Ivimey, Community Preservation Committee

To date, the town has $158,000 in its community preservation account and expects to raise about $217,000 by the end of the fiscal year. Coupled with additional revenue in fiscal year 2003, which starts July 1, and the state match due Oct. 15, the account is expected to have $541,000 in the fall.

Nearly 450 residents packed the gym Saturday to hear presentations and debate on some 19 articles, which are items of business before Town Meeting. But the venerable old democratic forum only tackled eight in the first session. And most of those — to use basketball vernacular — were no slam-dunk. In other words, the issues took considerable time, something that promoted one frustrated resident to implore an issue be moved along because she had an Easter dinner to cook.

Town Meeting was continued to Monday where voters addressed suing Massport over the runway and amendments to the town zoning bylaw including allowing special permits for accessory dwellings and Caroline and Sarah deLima of Summer Street both love to perform on stage.

Like mother, like daughter

Local acting duo loves the stage

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The acting world has seen some memorable mother/daughter duos in its history. Goldie Hawn and Kate Hudson, Blythe Danner and Gwyneth Paltrow, Debbie Reynolds and Carrie Fisher are a few of the pairs. Now hoping to join the illustrious list are two of Cohasset's own, Sarah and Caroline deLima.

The effervescent combo lives on Summer Street and has always had the spirit of the theater in their house.

"You need to take an imaginary situation and make it real, it's a very honest process."
— Caroline deLima, Summer Street

"My parents always had theater people around, singing and dancing and just carrying on," Caroline said. "It was a very natural progression for me to go into theater."

With Kool-Aid grins on their faces and insuppressible laughter filling the room, the deLimas described the high and lows of their acting careers.

Caroline, with blazing blue eyes and a radiant smile, was involved in her first play, "My Fair Lady," at the age of two. She is currently performing in the Company Theatre's production of "Cabaret" in Norwell. She graduated from Indiana University in August where she studied the performing arts.

"There's a whole self-discovery process involved in acting which makes it so intriguing," she said. "You need to take an imaginary situation and make it real, it's a very honest process."

Ledge article gets blasted

Fails to garner two-thirds majority

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

More than half the voters at Town Meeting on Saturday wanted to protect Cohasset's most prominent natural feature, its ledge. But that was not enough.

With a vote of 191-146, the bylaw change failed to garner the necessary two-thirds support it needed to pass..

The so-called "ledge" bylaw was aimed at protecting ledge that was eight feet in height or more. Municipal projects, work to existing septic systems and maintenance of public utilities were all exempt.

The contentious debate about the bylaw centered around people's concerns over property rights versus their wish to preserve the ledge in town.

"This is a fruitless, vindictive and mean effort to stop me from building on my property."
— Ellen Morrissey, 488 Jerusalem Road

Ellen Morrissey, 488 Jerusalem Road, said the article was aimed at stopping the development on two lots she owns off Beach Street.

"This is a snob zoning issue," she proclaimed demonstratively at one of the six microphones on Town Meeting floor. "This is a fruitless, vindictive and mean effort to stop me from building on my property."

However, during the presentation of the article Planning Board member Peter Pratt said it was not intended to restrict building in certain areas. He said the Planning Board spent a considerable amount of time crafting the article making sure it was aimed at stopping only those developments which would have a negative impact on the town.

"There's new technology in blasting and chipping that did not exist before," Pratt said. "There are currently no bylaws in place to control explosives."

Although both the selectmen and the Advisory Committee recom-

DPW Superintendent Harold Litchfield, center, is surrounded by co-workers who helped surprise him with a retirement party last week.

Long-time highway chief calls it a day

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It's difficult to surprise Harold Litchfield.

Even when it comes to Mother Nature – who's decidedly fickle with local weather, which can cause a host of nightmarish road conditions – Litchfield, 67, didn't get ruffled. He'd often quip when people inquired about what winter would be like, "Ask me on April 15."

Consequently it took a little bit of work behind the scenes by Litchfield's two daughters, Peggy Litchfield and Julie Borland, to take their Dad unawares on his "last" day of work So they picked his second-to-last day at work (Thursday) and easily rounded up a bevy of town officials, co-workers and friends to hold an impromptu party for someone who is a Cohasset institution.

"He's a wonderful person and has been a wonderful guy to have had on the highway department all these years," said Selectman Merle Brown, 69, a lifelong friend of Litchfield. "He was very conscientious and very concerned about the town he loved so much.

"We're definitely going to miss him."

Litchfield is stepping down after some 42 years working for the town. He started as a laborer in 1960 and worked his way up the ladder, serving as the elected highway surveyor for 24 years. He was appointed to head the newly created Department of Public Works in 1995; the DPW put the highway, tree and park and cemetery departments all under one umbrella.

The Beechwood Street resident, who shows up at work at about 6:30 a.m. like clockwork, said he plans to stay busy with his own business that installs driveways,

Road race goes high-tech

Ankle watch records time

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

A sports watch, T-shirt and running shorts are standard equipment for most runners. But thanks to new technology, an ankle bracelet can be added to that list.

The state-of-the-art anklets include computer chips that will record the exact time the individual runner crosses the finish line.

The Cohasset Road Race by the Sea, in its 26th year and known as one of the most scenic road races around, will supply its runners with the new technology for the first time Sunday.

"This is much more than a race. It's a community event."
— Tom Gruber, race director

Race director Tom Gruber said the annual event — which is sponsored by the Cohasset Rotary and helps pay for college scholarships for local high school graduates — attracts anywhere from 700-1,200 participants depending on the weather.

"This technology will help us get our results much faster and with greater accuracy," Gruber said.

Each runner is provided with an envelope at the start of the race with his or her assigned bib number, and corresponding computer chip on a Velcro band to be attached to the ankle. The runners cross special mats at the finish line that read the computer chip. The chip and mat, which is equipped with antennas, work together sending a message to special boxes that record the times that are read by a computer. The Rotary is obtaining the Winning Time chips and related technology from Haverill-based Bay State Race Services.

Runners will wear Winning Time ankle bracelets in Sunday's race.

"Runners are starting to expect this type of technology or its equivalent at first-class races," Gruber said. Cohasset's 10-kilometer race is sanctioned by USA Track & Field, the national governing body for track and field, long-distance running, and race walking.

Gruber said race organizers liked the Winning Time chip because of the ankle bracelet. Some races use chips that have to be tied into the shoelaces. Because the chips have to be returned once the racers cross the finish line, Gruber liked the ease of the Velcro anklet.

"Runners are exhausted when they cross the finish line and this way, they don't have to reach down and untie their shoelaces, they can just snap off the chip – it makes it easier," he said.

Runway lawsuit is not grounded

$30K goes to cause

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Efforts to have Cohasset sign on to a lawsuit to stop a proposed runway at Logan took off Monday night as voters supported an article appropriating $30,000 toward the cause.

The town will now join neighboring towns Hull, Hingham and Revere in a joint lawsuit that aims to prove Massport's Environmental Impact Report was fraudulent and misleading.

Ralph Dormitzer, a proponent of the issue, outlined his concerns in a 15-minute slide presentation to Town Meeting. He showed how the number of flights would increase over Cohasset, from 630 to 970 a day, if runway 14/32 became a reality. Dormitzer also identified the impacts the runway would have on residents, which includes sleep deprivation, anxiety and a possible loss of property value.

"This lawsuit would prevent Massport from proceeding with improvements to Logan before another Environmental Impact Report was conducted," he said. "We need to join it in order to preserve the quality of our town."

"We need to join it in order to preserve the quality of our town."
— Ralph Dormitzer, 334 S. Main St.

Selectman Tom Callahan, said he recognized the need to take action against Massport but felt this was the wrong path to take. He said the lawsuit is still in its infancy and the town will end up spending much more on it in the future. With the passage of the article, the town has now appropriated a total of $78,500 toward the fighting the runway. (The initial $48,500 was for a review of the environmental impact report on the proposed runway that has become the basis for the lawsuit).

"This is not just $30,000," he said. "This is the wrong approach to stopping that runway."

Dr. John Connolly, 85 Atlantic Ave., presented a medical perspective on the dangers of the runway. He said he has serious concerns for the long-term health effects that the runway could have. He mentioned higher cancer rates have been identified in towns that were at an aviation crossroad. Extrapolating from a study done in Minneapolis/St. Paul, Connolly said the townspeople could have a 400 percent higher risk for cancer if the runway was to come to fruition.

"Twenty years from now when its been identified that the town has higher cancer rates it will be too late," he said. "The time to take action on this is now."

Conrad Langenhagen, 24 Sanctuary Pond Road, said the situation with the airplanes overhead has gotten so intrusive that he's thinking of moving out of town. He said it's a shame Cohasset's quality of life has been taken advantage of by Massport, he said.

"We've all had to pause our conversations because of the roar overhead," he said. "Our children deserve the right to live in a peaceful town as they grow up."

Bruce Pratt, 83 Sohier St. an employee of Logan for the last 35 years, said the town should concentrate its efforts on trying to get Massport to change its flight patterns so Cohasset is not so adversely affected. He said because of Sept. 11, the aviation business has been set back at least 15 years.

"It's a waste of money at this point because that runway won't be built for some time," he said. "The town should set its sites on getting those flights over the ocean."

But voters sided with the runway opponents and approved the Citizens Petition article on a voice vote.

Flexible date for Town Meeting

Because of the passing of a bylaw at Town Meeting last weekend, selectmen will now have the ability to change the date of Town Meeting on or before Dec. 1 of the preceding year. Concerns were raised that limiting Town Meeting to the last weekend of March can create logistical nightmares. This year, the meeting was held on Easter weekend which inhibited some people from attending.

Selectmen said they will take into account religious holidays as well as school vacations when scheduling Town Meeting.

Sidewalk relief

Voters at Town Meeting Monday night readily appropriated $15,000 to be used for cost estimates and construction drawings to construct the sidewalk along Beechwood Street from S. Main Street up Norman Todd Road and continuing until it meets the existing sidewalk.

Abutters to the area have long complained that the lack of a sidewalk creates a danger.

Correction to water story

An article in last week's Mariner on the proposed sale of water to Hingham incorrectly stated "problems" with the sale have put it on hold. The Water Commission did not say that. The reason the sale is on hold, it said, was because Hingham Mass-American is being sold to another company and that sale won't be complete until after Town Meeting. There are no "problems" with the negotiations; they actually are going well, Water Commission Chairman John McNabb said.

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall as of April 1.

School safety plan updated

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

School safety is an issue that concerns most everyone. From parents, to administrators, teachers and students no-one wants Cohasset youths to be involved in a dangerous situation.

To that end, the School Safety Task Force presented a revised safety plan to the School Committee last week.

"It's really important for both the staff and the students to know what to do in case of an incident," said Chartis Tebbetts, member of both the School Committee and the safety task force.

The task force started to meet in the fall when it reviewed the initial plan as well as the one school health coordinator Michael Gill, the task force coordinator, had drafted. The meetings focused on reviewing the "Crisis Plan" that had been in place, and expanding the plan to address more comprehensive school safety concerns.

Specifically, Tebbetts said the last plan was written before the wave of school shootings so those issues needed to be addressed.

"We never took into account of something like that happening in Cohasset," she said.

The task force was made up of Cohasset School District personnel, Cohasset Police and Fire Department representatives, parents and students.

Along with supporting the notion that safe schools are an essential ingredient for learning and developing personal and social skills, the plan asks the School Committee to continue looking at a variety of issues. A few of them are:

- Investigate ways to improve the current communication system within the School District.
- Investigate the use of seatbelts on school buses.
- Provide blue prints and floor plans of all school buildings to both the police and fire departments.
- Upgrade the phone system to include phone conversation recording capability
- Strongly consider the use of and purchase of security cameras on school buses, in school buildings and on school grounds.
- Support the creation of an Emergency Kit or "Crisis Box" for each school.
- Arrange for all school doors locked at all times and arrange for the creation of a "buzz-in" system that allows the office at each school to control entrance into the building.
- Support the purchase of photo identification of all students and staff in grades K-12 to be kept in the main office of each school (this is already being done K-6).
- Expand school curricula so it addresses violence prevention and lays the foundation for mutual respect and helps youth acquire the personal and social skills to communicate effectively and resolve differences peacefully.
- Require all school visitors to sign-in and wear "name tag passes" issued by the office at each school.

Police Chief Bob Jackson, a member of the task force, said it's always good to be able to plan a response in advance. He said the plan will also help with training exercises.

"Whether its a bomb threat, hostage situation or just a situation that puts the faculty, staff and students at risk, we'll be better prepared," he said.

Voters OK money for engineering, aesthetics

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Town Meeting set the stage for Cohasset's third major sewer project in recent memory with an $180,000 appropriation to initiate engineering and provide cost estimates to install sewers to about 450 homes in the Little Harbor-Atlantic Avenue area.

At the same time, voters approved spending an additional $100,000 to beautify the exterior of sewer treatment plant, which sits in the salt marsh off Elm Street and is visible to many homes that abut the marsh.

The money for engineering for the sewer extension to Little Harbor is far less than the $750,000 debt exclusion initially asked for, but withdrawn, due to the current fiscal constraints in town, in particular the expected delay of state reimbursement on the school projects.

The Sewer Commission opted for the lower figure because it didn't think the debt exclusion would fly with voters at Saturday's Town Election.

Installing sewers to the area would help eliminate pollutants and contaminants in Little Harbor from area septic systems, officials said.

The sewer treatment plant's capacity can be increased from 300,000 gallons per day to 450,000 gallons per day to accommodate the expansion, Sewer Commission chairman Gary Vanderweil said.

He explained it was important for Town Meeting to pass this article because it would indicate to the state the town is committed to dealing with the Little Harbor area, which was of great concern in the Second Amended Final Agreement for Judgment, a legal agreement the town inked with the state that directs the town to solve its wastewater problems.

Vanderweil also said by moving forward, the affected homeowners would have a degree of certainty the sewer would be coming for them to tie into, and therefore could plan accordingly.

Sewer Commissioner Ray Kasperowicz presented the minority view of the commission saying more time was needed before committing money to the project. He explained it takes two years to determine the flow from a home that's been connected to the sewer and therefore, it is impossible at this stage to determine how much of the plant's capacity would be taken up by the new users in the Central Cohasset Sewer District.

He also said not everyone in the central district is hooked up yet.

"Let's do this carefully and establish a baseline," he said. "Let's see in 12-24 months what the pattern of usage is."

"The state is not going away as far as Little Harbor is concerned."

— Galt Grant of the Advisory Committee

The Capital Budget Committee and a majority of the Advisory Committee and selectmen supported the article, saying it would help the town comply with the state court order.

"The state is not going away as far as Little Harbor is concerned," said Galt Grant of the Advisory Committee.

But Selectman Michael Sullivan said it was hard to justify spending the money now when the $10 million project would not come to fruition until 2007. Selectman Merle Brown said he was also against the article because there is no comprehensive plan to address wastewater problems in other parts of town.

John Beck, 44 Nichols Road, who is a member of Citizens for Environmental Solutions that is backing installing sewers to Little Harbor, urged voters to approve the article.

"It's clear we need to put a stake in the ground and say any potential capacity at the treatment plant should be used to sewer existing homes and not be available to someone who walks in with a check," he said.

He also said the sewer's aggregate cost is less than the other options available and would demonstrate to the state the town's is serious about resolving the pollution problem in Little Harbor.

STAFF PHOTO/SUSAN HANEY
Nancy Snowdale of Mill Lane addresses the Little Harbor sewer issue at Town Meeting on Saturday.

Plant aesthetics

Voters also approved $100,000 more to help make the sewer treatment plant look more like a New England country barn than an industrial building. The money is on top of $150,000 appropriated for the same purpose in November 2000.

"After they got into it, the $150,000 was not enough," said Grant of the Advisory Committee. "It looks like $100,000 will do the job." The money will come from sewer rates not taxation.

The project includes dressing up the main building and covering the outbuildings at the site.

Joseph Goggins of 57 Elm St. said the entire town would benefit from making the sewer plant, which sits in the salt marsh, more pleasing to the eye. He explained the neighbors were propelled into action after a corrugated metal building went up 18 months ago. They lobbied to retrofit the building with a new exterior and scaled back a couple of plans that were too expensive.

Citizens Petitions voted down

Two citizens petitions concerning Town Meeting procedures were easily defeated on Monday. The first article asked voters to approve a bylaw which would place every financial article which involved more than $25,000 on a special ballot to be voted on during an election.

The second article asked Cohasset to adopt a binding initiative petition which would allow citizens to obtain 750 signatures and put an issue on the ballot rather than have it go before Town Meeting.

The proponents of the issues felt the two changes would allow more people to become involved with the decision making process. However, most in attendance disagreed.

"These proposals make all the work done at Town Meeting just a prologue to the election," said Susan Kent, a member of the Advisory Board. "Not only is this costly and inefficient but it takes all authority away from Town Meeting."

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

APOLOGY

Hello Cohasset. I hope that this column finds everyone enjoying the somewhat springtime weather that we have had in the past week. It is so nice to have it and I am hoping that it continues. I would also like to send out an apology to many residents of our town and elsewhere for my omission last week of wishing a Happy Passover to everyone who celebrates this special holiday. I had a message from a citizen here in town who was quite upset that I had not mentioned it. Thank you so much to this woman for bringing this to my attention. I do try to always remember all holidays and celebrations and am so sorry for this mistake. If you would like to call me back so that we can discuss any upcoming holidays, I would truly appreciate it. In this day and age with diversity being so key and important and for me to pride myself in being so open and interested in hearing and learning about all religions and cultures, I definitely missed the boat on this one.

HOOP CHAMPS

Let's hear it for our town's eighth-grade traveling basketball team consisting of Aly Belz, Jen Dinger, Cally Ernst, Chelsea Grossman, Katie James, Mia Lieb-Lappen, Lisa Musto and Katrina Reardon. These girls entered the Old Colony League new to the league three years ago and have made it to the final championship all three years. The first two years they walked away with the championship. This year, they fell a little short to the undefeated Duxbury team but not without a fight. The girls battled back from a 12-point deficit to tie the game, only to lose it in overtime. Hopefully, these players will be the future to girls varsity basketball and they even had Ellen Carr, the high school varsity coach there on Saturday to cheer them on. This was for the final game and she totally supported their efforts. The girls have been coached by Ed Lappen and Jeff Grossman all three years! Fantastic team work girls, you are awesome! In Cohasset's eyes, you are champions, win or lose!

INSPIRATIONAL TALK

Don't forget Saturday, April 6, Jan Phillips, author and inspirational speaker will be leading a retreat at Glastonbury Abbey from 9 a.m.-4p.m. titled, "From Creation to Transformation-How Our Creative Works Can Help Heal The World." BREAST CANCER WALK

Colleen Geary is dedicated Cohasset woman who will participate in the Avon Breast Cancer 3-Day event. The dates of the Boston 3 Day is May 17-19. The course runs from Fitchburg to Boston, and is a total of 60 miles. Colleen will walk 20 miles a day for three days. This is a first for her and she is participating to remember and honor friends and family who died from breast cancer, as well as to celebrate those that have survived.

One of Colleen's biggest motivators is her cousin who had Hodgkins Disease twice, once in her late teens and again in her early 20s. Because of all of the radiation and chemotherapy her cousin was exposed to, she is at an increased risk for breast cancer. The mission of the Avon Breast Cancer Crusade is to fund access to care and find a cure for breast cancer. Gifts are awarded by the Avon Products Foundation, Inc., a non-profit 501(c)(3) accredited public charity. The goal of the Avon Breast Cancer Crusade is to benefit all women, with a special emphasis on reaching the medically under served, including low-income, elderly and minority women, and those with inadequate health insurance. Colleen recently moved back to town. She grew up in Cohasset and graduated from Cohasset High in 1988. Colleen knows how many wonderful and generous people live here in town and is looking for donations to this cause. Donations can be made on line at the Avon 3 Day Web site at www.bethepeople.com or by check sent to Colleen Geary at 55 Hillside Drive, Cohasset, MA 02025.

Pilgrim bank kids' art contest

Pilgrim Cooperative Bank is pleased to announce the kick off of the first annual "Experience the Pilgrim Difference" art contest. Open to all children ages 4 to 12 that reside in Cohasset, this year's theme is "My Favorite Place in Cohasset.'

The Art Contest was inspired by a desire to showcase the talents of children in the community at the new branch of Pilgrim Cooperative Banks children's area. This innovative new children's area will allow children "to be kids" while their parents do the family's banking. What better way to personalize the new area then with the children's own beautiful and creative artwork of images depicting Cohasset through their eyes.

One winner per age group (a total of nine awards) will receive $25 in a Pilgrim Cooperative Bank Savings Account and their winning entry will be framed and displayed in the children's area.

All artwork must be the child's original, hand-done creation. All artwork must be on a flat medium no larger than 8 1/2 by 11 inch. All art techniques are acceptable including but not limited to all pain, chalk, markers, charcoal, watercolor, crayon, photography, and collage. Deadline for entry is April 12. Also, the back of the picture must include:

The child's first and last name, parent/guardian approval signature, home address, home phone number, e-mail address, age, grade and school, title of the artwork, a brief description of the artwork (25 words or less)

For more information about the contest, call Karyn Swaun - J.K.N. Strategies at 617-319-6000.

Meghan Faherty, 4, of Bayberry Lane in Cohasset is helped by her little sister Betsy, 3, as she works on her entry for the 1st Annual "Experience The Pilgrim Difference" Art Contest, sponsored by Pilgrim Cooperative Bank.

Middle-schooler can spell success

Is runner up in regional bee

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Can you spell c-h-a-m-p-i-o-n?

Charlotte Reel, seventh-grade student at Cohasset Middle-High School, finished second in a regional spelling bee last month.

The energetic 13-year-old won two spelling bees before being sent to the regional competition in Weymouth. The first was in her classroom and then she took home top honors at the middle school competition.

"I was surprised I did so well," Charlotte said. "I was expecting that I was going to go out pretty early."

Charlotte was stumped on "bicaudate," which means having two tails, in the 13th round of the three-hour competition. She said she was uncertain of the pronunciation of the word and when she asked for the definition, it was no help.

"I was just hoping I wouldn't get a hard word."
— Charlotte Reel , 13

"It is such an obscure word," Charlotte said.

Spellers were allowed to ask for the pronunciation, origin, definition and for the word to be used in a sentence.

The winner spelled "mortification" to take home the top prize.

For finishing in second place, Charlotte received a "spelling ace" watch, Webster's dictionary, a plaque, a certificate, and a $300 savings bond.

Anne Reel said the experience of being in the contest was wonderful for her daughter. She said each contestant was treated as the spelling champion of the school they were representing.

"There was a really nice feeling to the day," she said. "We were thrilled to go and so happy for Charlotte.

Charlotte was not disappointed in her finish and was extremely proud to have made it that far. She was participating in her first regional spelling bee.

"I was just hoping I wouldn't get a hard word," she said. "Even if you don't win, it's a lot of fun being up there."

In the previous rounds, Charlotte remembers getting increasingly nervous as she kept giving the correct answers. She said some of her more challenging words were "cabaret," "bilious," "trey" and "basilicas."

The contestants were given a pamphlet that outlined the approximately 3,700 words that they could be asked. Words were grouped into beginner, intermediate and advanced categories.

Charlotte said many of the students had been studying the book since September but she began later because she didn't anticipate making the finals.

"Everybody was really nervous on stage," she said. "During breaks most people would study."

Charlotte said she met a lot of great people at the contest; there were 49 kids competing, and she hopes to stay in touch with them.

The spelling bee was sponsored by the Patriot Ledger. The winner moved on to Washington, D.C. to compete in a national competition.

Sarah, whose genuine sense of humor is hid behind an English accent, was trained years ago at a drama school in London. When she and her husband Richard moved to Cohasset from England in the late 60s, she stopped performing for some time, before getting back into the art in the 80s.

One of the reasons she started acting again was to become involved in the community.

"It started out as a way of meeting people and making friends," Sarah said. "After that, it just kind of evolved."

Sarah is a card carrying actor, meaning she is a member of the Actor's Equity union, and is now performing in one of Boston's most treasured theaters, the Huntington Theater. Being in the union guarantees a certain pay scale and can allow actors to get their foot in the door.

While her mother concentrates on acting in professional productions, Caroline has been involved with mostly amateur plays. She is currently building her résumé and gaining acting experience before moving to New York.

"The lifestyle of being an actor is so difficult that you have to be passionate about it to pursue a career," she said. "I figure now is the time to go for it."

Sarah said she doesn't recommend everyone trying to make it big through acting. However, she feels Caroline has a special spark that enables her to connect with the audience.

"Most of the kids who have stars in their eyes have no idea how difficult it is to succeed," Sarah said. She added what an actor needs most is the ability to make people want to watch them.

"A person either has that quality or they don't, it can't be learned," she said. "Caroline has it."

Although modest when describing their own acting skills, the pair was not hesitant in praising one another. When Sarah got up, Caroline expounded on her mother's acting skills.

"She can sing, act and do almost any accent flawlessly," she said. "She's hot stuff."

After Sarah finally relented and spoke of her abilities, it was clear she was sought after.

"When you're this age, you kind of have a lock on some of the parts," she explained. "There are not too many people that keep acting after they become mothers."

Sarah doesn't believe there is only one type of person that strives to become an actor. She said while many people see the Nathan Lane, larger-than-life personality as a prerequisite to being on stage, she feels otherwise.

"Many of the people who work regularly as actors are incredibly down to earth," she said. "They're always looking to the next job and living hand to mouth."

You can see Caroline performing in "Cabaret" all this weekend. Tickets are $23 in advance and $25 the day of show. For more information on tickets, call 781-871-2787.

Long-time highway chief calls it a day sewer connections and the like.

Although many hold him in high regard, Litchfield isn't used to a ton of praise and attention. But he had no choice last Thursday as upwards of 30 people jammed the DPW offices to wish him well.

"He's the finest DPW chief I've ever had the pleasure to work with," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "There's not one item that I ever called him up about that he hasn't taken care of without any problems."

Arthur Lehr, 82, who has served as civil defense director and on the recycling committee for many years, remembers Litchfield as a boy growing up in Beechwood.

"He was like he is now, heavy set and full of it," Lehr, 82, recalled. "But he's a devoted man who's worked his tail off for this town. He's very conscientious and could have done other things. But the town has come first."

Peggy Litchfield and her sister know well how devoted their Dad was to the job.

"It'll be an adjustment because he's never done anything but work," Peggy said about her father's retirement from the town. "Work has been his whole life, we seldom saw him before 9 at night."

But the women hold their father in as much affection as the entire DPW, which was like their second family.

"He's wonderful although he can come across as very gruff if you don't know him," Peggy Litchfield says.

And Borland, who now lives in Plymouth, said she was shocked when she turned onto a side street in that town her first winter and there wasn't enough sand.

"I was so used to having sanded roads," she said.

Mary Snow, Litchfield's administrative assistant since 1988, said Litchfield carries so much knowledge in his head.

"He can go back 40 years and say, 'I remember when I did that,'" she said. "It's been a pleasure to work with him and I wish him well."

DPW worker Kenny Thayer, who has also known Litchfield his entire life, says he usually beats Litchfield to work by a few minutes.

"I'm going to miss seeing his wave every morning as he walks through the door," Thayer said. "He's a great person and a great boss."

Litchfield's successor, Carl Sestito, who is a Cohasset native, was in no hurry to take over the reins.

"I hate to see him go," he said. "I wish he'd stay on a couple more years."

But for Litchfield, there was no question, the time had come to move on.

"I've served my purpose," he said. "I told Mark (Haddad) many times the town needs some young blood."

He said the crew was great to work with, but the residents have started to change.

"There are too many demanding people," he said.

Litchfield, said though, he's leaving the DPW in competent hands.

"Carl (Sestito) is a good man," he said, adding, "don't worry about me, I'll have plenty to do."

Road race goes high-tech

Despite going high-tech, Gruber stressed the annual event that includes the 1 p.m. race and 10 a.m. 5-kilometer walk is run by old-fashioned volunteerism and donations. After expenses, all the proceeds go toward scholarships and other worthy Rotary programs. Last year's race raised $8,000.

Gruber said the rotary, which has about 20 members, depends on about 150 volunteers on race day to work together to make the annual race that starts on North Main Street by the community center and ends on Highland Avenue near town hall memorable for the participants and their families.

The Appalachia Service Project, a home-building ministry for the poor, provides 12 teams of volunteers, which work two-hour shifts running the water stops and helping with food, registration and cleanup. Part of the proceeds of the race goes toward ASP's annual trip to Appalachia. The Rotary also helps support the food pantry, senior van and eradicating polio world wide.

"This is much more than a race," Gruber said. "It's a community event."

Gruber said the race is considered competitive and a tune-up for the Boston Marathon later this month. He said runners like the course that winds along the ocean. But the finishing times are usually a little slower than other 10K races because Cohasset has its own "Heartbreak Hill" on Forest Avenue, he said.

The entry fee for the race is $18 and participants can register by visiting www.roadracebythesea.com or at the check-in table at the community center, 3 N. Main St. on race day Sunday, April 7. For more about the race, see the sports section in this week's Mariner.

Town election is Saturday

Debate held for selectman's race

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Days away from annual town election, the three selectmen candidates made their cases in front of a cable-TV audience earlier in the week.

In what is the only race in town this year, the candidates fielded questions ranging from sewer issues to senior housing and the MBTA mitigation for Greenbush. The debate was broadcast on a local cable channel.

Town election will be held this Saturday from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. in the Town Hall auditorium. Town Clerk Marion Douglas said she expects about 20 percent of the town's registered voters to turn out. The results will be read by Town Moderator George Marlette after the votes have been tallied, anywhere between 7 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. The details of the election will also be posted in the front of Town Hall and at the police department.

There is still an override question on the ballot that concerns the sewer commission asking for $750,000. However, since the ballot was released, the commission amended its request and now longer seeks the additional spending. The question on the ballot is null and void and it is not necessary to vote on, said Finance Director Michael Buckley.

The race this year features selectmen incumbents Ronnie McMorris and Fred Koed seeking re-election, against newcomer Roger Hill, who is hoping to unseat one of them.

The trio agreed on most issues during the debate but Hill, whose campaign slogan is, "It's Time for a Change," felt the board needed fresh life while McMorris and Koed felt stability was important.

Both of the current selectmen cited their lengthy experience on various boards in town as to why they were qualified. Koed has served on the Advisory Committee, Water Commission, housing authority and has served as chairman on two of those boards. McMorris has been involved with the Conservation Commission, the Council on Elder Affairs, the Open Space Committee and the Growth and Development Committee.

The debt exclusion question on the ballot is null and void.

"It isn't easy being in public office, there's a lot to learn as you go," Koed said. "But it's a challenge and I hope to serve again."

McMorris seconded Koed's enthusiasm for the position.

"With all of the projects the town is undertaking and transitions underway, it's important to have strong leadership," she said.

While Hill recognized his lack of experience in the political field, he voiced his concern that people in town are not pleased with the way the government is run.

"I talk to people everyday who are upset," Hill said. "I think I would be an excellent addition to the board."

During the hour debate, candidates were peppered with questions from both the local media and residents who called in with their queries. While coming to a consensus on such issues such as senior housing, sewer improvements and stopping a proposed runway at Logan, the candidates differed in their opinion of Town Manager Mark Haddad's raise.

Haddad received a increase in pay this year when selectmen renegotiated his contract after learning he was a finalist for a similar position in Dedham.

Hill felt the raise was unnecessary and said the money could have been better spent on computers for the schools or equipment for the police and fire departments. He said it's not a question of performance but of setting priorities.

"The town was held over the barrel when it came to Mark (Haddad)," he said. "There were wiser ways to spend the money."

However, Koed felt it was important to keep Haddad in town especially with three departments (fire, police and department of public works) having new leadership.

"The town manager position is one of the most powerful positions in the Commonwealth," Koed said. "I think he has proved his worth here."

Koed noted Haddad has improved Cohasset's bond rating which is going to save the town $750,000 over the next 20 years.

"Getting a $12,000 raise is not that much considering how much he's helped us," Koed said.

McMorris also supported keeping Haddad on board.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Thanks, Harold

Harold Litchfield was at Town Meeting on Saturday where he usually is, standing at the back of the hall against the far wall.

So it wasn't hard to find the imposing figure when all 400-plus attendees jumped to their feet to give him a standing ovation following a resolution honoring his many years of service to the town.

Yes, working for the highway department and later the Department of Public Works, first as a laborer and then moving up the ladder to elected highway surveyor and finally to DPW chief was Litchfield's job.

But those who know Litchfield realize for him, serving the town he loves over the years was no clock-punching, 9 a.m.-5 p.m. occupation.

There is something about Litchfield that inspired confidence. It didn't seem like much rattled him especially when it came to what Mother Nature could dish out. He knows every street in this town intimately and can tell you off the top of his head what was done, and when to any stretch of road.

Although with his dry humor and short, curt way of expressing himself, he wasn't always the easiest interview — his kind-hearted warmth and gentle spirit were evident to his family and all those who worked with him over the years.

His two daughters planned a surprise retirement party for him at the DPW garage last Thursday. Cleverly, they outsmarted their dad by organizing it on his second-to-last day of work. Litchfield arrived and though not one to seek attention, seemed to enjoy spending a few minutes with a crowd of well-wishers that included co-workers, friends and past and present town officials.

Litchfield, 67, isn't retiring to Florida nor does he plan to sit around his home. He says he'll be hard at work with his own excavation company, Harold W. Litchfield, in the months and years ahead.

We wish him all the best and look forward to his friendly wave when we see him around town.

Also honored with resolutions Saturday are other town "treasures," including recently retired Police Chief Brian Noonan, former long-time Sewer Commissioner Henry Rattenbury, long-time Advisory Committee member Richard Avery and School Committee chairman Stephanie Noble, who is not seeking reelection.

We join Town Meeting in thanking them all for making a difference in this town we call home.

Paying for roads and bridges

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund announced the Swift Administration is planning an early release of $53,393.76 in local aid for Cohasset to fund transportation projects in the town, part of a total $50 million release of additional Chapter 90 funds for FY02. The early release of the funding will allow communities wide latitude in planning upcoming road and bridge construction.

This allotment is in addition to the $52,763 from the FY02 budget, for a total of $106,156.76 for this fiscal year.

With the early release of additional monies, cities and towns will be allowed more time to budget local aid into their road and bridge spending plans and permit them more latitude to prioritize projects. The state typically releases local aid – or Chapter 90 funding – in the late spring, the time when communities are gearing up for the road and bridge construction season.

Chapter 90 funding is allocated to cities and towns based on a formula which factors in the number of miles of local roadway, population, and the employment rate in a given community. The funding is reimbursed to cities and towns on pre-approved transportation projects as construction unfolds.

CRC clarifies harbor plans

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to clarify one aspect of the proposed harbor improvement plan that is the subject of a great deal of public criticism. The CRC has never stated, nor conveyed in a drawing that a wrought iron railing system should replace the wood and iron railing that borders the harbor today. Though wrought iron can be an option if the community feels it is appropriate, it has never been a suggested material option by the CRC.

The materials depicted in the CRC drawings reflect a steel and wood combination railing system. Painted steel is commonly used throughout waterfront locations because of its relatively low maintenance requirements and its high degree of strength. The strength of steel enables the use of thinner rails and supports to maximize the view beyond the rail itself. The CRC has also consistently stated that steel is just one of a variety of options. Wood, granite or any combination can also be used if that is what the community prefers.

It appears that some individuals have concluded that a drawing created by The Cecil Group depicting a steel rail and wooden post railing design was a wrought iron system. Not so. To further distort the facts, some individuals have also concluded that the reason the CRC is recommending wrought iron is because Peter Roy wants to have the iron fence that borders his home continue around the harbor. A ridiculous conclusion that satisfies the conspiracy theories of many, yet only succeeds in damaging the reputation of a few.

The CRC has also consistently stated that the existing railing can remain if the construction of a new sidewalk is undertaken in a manner that does not require the removal of the railing system to complete the work. The extent of the sidewalk reconstruction will depend on the degree of pedestrian safety and access improvements the community wishes to implement. The greater the emphasis on pedestrian safety and access the more likely the reconstruction will necessitate the removal of the existing railing system. If the railing is removed for construction purposes then a new railing must be installed that addresses Massachusetts safety standards and guidelines. Such safety standards mean that the railing must not be less than 42 ins. high (existing railing is 28–32 ins. high) and cannot have open spaces more than 4 ins. wide to prevent children from getting through. This is not a design choice by the CRC, but a mandated safety regulation by the state.

The CRC has received a variety of comments on proposed improvement ideas, and believes that an effective planning approach is one that listens to all concerns, and exhausts all design opportunities to address these concerns before a final decision can be made by the community. Maybe in the end the community will decide to leave everything as is, but at least the decision will be based on knowing all of the options and opportunities available. The existing painted 2x6 railing system has been in place for over one hundred years. What is wrong with looking at the safest and best design choices available today for the next hundred years?

Constructive dialogue is a critical component to any public planning endeavor. The planning process is meant to stimulate public discussion to ensure that all ideas and concerns are heard, and that all design opportunities are considered. The goal of the public planning process around the harbor is to help the community address pedestrian and bicycle safety and access concerns. Yes, through the public discussions some residents have told us that existing sidewalk conditions around the harbor are fine. However, some residents have also told us that conditions make it difficult to walk, run, bike, or push a baby carriage, and expressed the fear they have of their children being able to jump through the existing railing. Though these points of view appear to be quite incompatible, the CRC is confident that continued dialogue can result in a consensus that improves pedestrian safety and access, maintains public parking opportunities, and does not negatively impact the areas character or historical value within the community.

As we experienced in the village planning process, it takes a great deal of constructive dialogue, patience and time to establish a community consensus. The CRC is confident that the same can be achieved in the harbor. If anyone has a question or concern please visit the CRC office at 87 Elm St. ,or call directly at (781) 383-2449.

We are all free to make our own judgements on what is in the best interest of the community, however, the public planning process is better served if these judgements are based on facts rather than ill-informed conclusions.

Peer pressure at Town Meeting

TO THE EDITOR:

After attending Town Meeting on Saturday, I left with a feeling of dismay. I attend town meetings regularly because I believe in my right to vote on issues facing this town. However, after voting "no" on Article 16 which was for the town to spend $200,000 on the construction of two new baseball fields, I was approached by a proponent of the new fields and asked how I, a parent of Little League players could do such a thing? I went on to explain that I felt that fiscal restraint should be the "order of the day" and that spending should be limited to those things prioritized by our Capital Budget Plan. Secondly, I also explained that building fields for one specific sport, which will service a majority of children only ages 6-12, was not what I considered to be a prudent expenditure of town money.

What really had me dismayed, however, was not the question of "why?" but that there was an assumption that I should have an allegiance to Little League because my children are involved in it. Peer pressure even at this age!

My vote was not against baseball. My vote was against, what I consider, an inappropriate expenditure of town money given these uncertain fiscal times and given the many capital budget items on the docket over the next few years.

I believe in an individual's right to vote. It is a shame that "peer pressure" can't stop at the door. As adults, we should be able to agree to disagree. Perhaps more people would come to Town Meeting if they didn't feel the "pressure" of the hand count process. Let's remember how lucky we are to be invited into this process of spending and decision making.

Thoughts on Town Meeting

TO THE EDITOR

The town meeting form of government is as old as our country's beginning. It is democracy in it's purest form.

Cohasset has a rich history of colorful town meetings. In the middle 1960s a zoning article brought 920 of the 3,500 registered voters to Osgood School to take action on the warrant. The moderator was Robert James, a stickler for form and legal correctness at a meeting. Articles were explained fully, debate was to the point and the town's legislative business clearly dispatched.

Mr. James would wonder what has happened the last few years at Town Meeting.

Now, we have an explanation of the warrant presented at town meeting That is unlike the warrant delivered to our home. It is vague as to the funding source for articles. If an article is withdrawn, there is nothing written or orally presented at the meeting to be clarified. Should we ask? Why isn't it discussed?

The moderator wants as many articles as possibly passed silently with no discussion. In the Congress, if this procedure is done, at least their staff brief the congressmen so the officials concur or not. If town meeting procedures are too difficult others can become the moderator.

Several years ago, the reading of the deceased town officials was dispensed with. I spoke to the moderator and he will read the list in the future. There many who have given their time and talents to our town and they should verbally be honored as they are in the town report.

Courtesy has returned, which in several previous meeting, notably the Music Circus School debate, was lacking. It is well to passionate about an issue, as I have at times, but decorum is the watchword. It was gratifying to hear a passionate and polite debate on the ledge issue. The owner defended her right on her land and she prevailed. It reminded me of Gilbert Tower of past town meetings who livened up the assembled and gave sound thoughts. I wonder how he and our founding fathers would have judged Town Meeting today.

Our citizens that do not attend town meeting, give up their right to question the finances and issues in their town. It does "no good" to complain unless you voice your opinions and concerns - democracy can wither on the vine. We are the envy of the world., especially for those who would like to come to the United States to live. We will pass away, as other enlightened civilizations such as Greece and Rome, if we are not vigilant.

Reason for Seeking Office: In 1994, I was elected to the Water Commission, where I served as chairman. We stabilized water rates, while implementing many emergency improvements. We developed a plan for improvements and replaced old water meters throughout the system, improving the cash flow. The Forest Avenue water main improved pressure and fire protection along its length and the surrounding areas.
Towards the end of my term as water commissioner, I decided instead to attend graduate school. Two years later, I had earned a master of science degree in public affairs from the McCormack Institute.
I have served as chairman on three of the four different town boards I have been appointed or elected to. This experience has allowed me to serve you better as selectman. With my experience on the MBTA Greenbush Mitigation Committee, I would like to continue to represent you through the next difficult phase of this MBTA project.

SELECTMAN/ Ronnie McMorris

Name: Roseanne "Ronnie" Marmo McMorris
Age: 49
Address: 89 Doane Street
Family: Husband: David McMorris Children: Karen, 19; Leah and Sarah, 16; Rachel, 11.

Ronnie McMorris

Reason for seeking office:
Six years ago, I sought election to the Board of Selectmen believing I could contribute leadership committed to fiscal responsibility, planning, and the preservation of the unique quality of life Cohasset provides. As a Selectman, I've tackled many important issues, including the capital improvements to our schools, the adoption of the Community Preservation Act and the enhancement of town services, including the addition of a paramedic unit to our ambulance service. We can anticipate an equal number of challenges over the next three years, including the ongoing capital projects, senior housing, development of a master plan, revitalization of the village and restoration of the Greenbush rail line.
Looking at all of theses achievements and challenges, it is vital that we continue our commitment to sound financial planning. I will continue focusing my energy on environmental issues, town management and planning, while continuing to support programs for our senior citizens and promoting excellence in our schools.

SELECTMAN/Roger Hill

Name: Roger Q. Hill
Age: 42
Address: 19A Highland Ave.
Family: Wife: Joanne C. Hill. Son: Quentin R. Hill
Years in town: 42
Education: K to 8 Cohasset, 9 to 12 Chapel Hill - Chancy Hall, College: Wentworth Institute of Technology
Occupation: Real estate, property management, carpenter

Roger Q. Hill

Reason for seeking office:
I am seeking a three year term of Selectman in Cohasset for the reasons that there are many important issues on the horizon. I feel the only way to have some control over them is to be a part of the decision making process. I have lived here 42 years and hear many complaints from the long term residents. The Board of Selectman need a voice from someone that sees and deals with the people on a daily basis, which I feel I do.
I also feel let down by the recent numbers the MBTA released in the Globe $10,000,000 Scituate; $40,000,000 Hingham; $21,000,000 Weymouth; $3,500,000; Cohasset; Do you think we got short changed? I do. How about Avalon Bay? I see a big problem with 254 units being put in. The schools don't need a possible 500 new students or Sandy Beach with 200 to 300 more cars during the summer season. See you on the sixth.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Jane Pescatore

Jane Pescatore

Name: (Frances) Jane Pescatore
Age: 55
Address: 12 Lantern Lane
Family: Husband: Peter, Three children: Matthew 19, Noah 17, and Christopher, 14
Years in town: eight
Education: BA. The Ohio State University
Occupation: Homemaker
Civic/Municipal Experience: I have been active in the Cohasset PSO for seven years.
Reason for seeking office: I am running for the School Committee position because I feel that, through my experience in the PSO, I have an in-depth knowledge and understanding of the issues confronting the school system. As president of the PSO, I have had to insure open channels of communication with parents, administrators, teachers, and the School Committee. In order to be successful, the PSO relies on the hard work of many volunteers. It has been imperative for me to provide a forum for open dialog to insure that we are all working toward the same goals. There is no question that budget issues are in the forefront of what's happening in the schools and the Town.
Prior to raising my family, I had extensive business experience which included managing multi-million dollar departments within a Fortune 500 Corporation. I look forward to using all of my past experience and perspective as a contributing member of the School Committee.

Vote Saturday!

The polls are open from 8 a.m.-6 p.m. Saturday at Town Hall.

Celebrate Earth Day in Cohasset April 20

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Earth Day is April 22. Meg Moore of the Community Garden Club points out that when Earth Day was started in 1970, there was no EPA; no Clean Air or Clean Water Act, nor any Endangered Species Act.
To help celebrate Earth Day in Cohasset, on Saturday April 20, the Board of Health will be supporting a number of activities in town, and we're asking for your help. On the morning of April 20 at 10 a.m., the board and other volunteers will meet to begin cleanup of selected areas in town needing it. We are considering Peppermint Brook off Pond Street, and Ellms Meadow off Cushing Road, but you know others. Give us your ideas for locations for cleanup, and we'll have a runoff for the most needy location. Then meet the board members and staff at Town Hall at 10 a.m., and we'll go to those areas most deserving of our attention. We'll supply garbage bags and tools, and free T-shirts for the first 50 volunteers.

We'll supply garbage bags and tools, and free T-shirts for the first 50 volunteers.

The Board of Health is also supporting the following activities for Earth Day :
Boat rides from the Hagerty Property using the rowing dories the High School kids built, to go out and visit the sites where water sampling will be taken this summer. Jack Buckley's CMS volunteers will describe what the kids do, and act as recruiters for this summer and next year.
The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will conduct a guided tour and walk through Great Brewster Woods — learn about invasive species and lots more. Meet Meg Moore at the Town Hall at 10 a.m. for a leisurely two-hour tour these beautiful woods.
Special Earth Day clinic to be held by the Public Health nurses.
Give us your ideas. Your support for these activities is needed, and you'll be doing yourself, as well as the town a favor.
Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

Ease of email is changing life the way we know it

MY VIEW

EVAN SCHIFF

As a card-carrying member of the generation which has helped the world embrace computers like never before, I'm here to take a stand. Computers are changing our society into one in which we never need to speak to another person and it's eroding the quality of our collective lives.
Need to buy a CD? Go online. Curious about the score of the game last night? Fire up the modem. Haven't talked to a good friend in sometime? Why risk uncomfortable silences on the telephone when you can send a sanitary email?
My sisters have buddy lists which include more people than I know. I have friends who would rather email the person in the next cubicle to them then stand up and talk.
With an email, you don't risk saying the wrong things or exposing true feelings due to another person perceiving the intonation in your voice. You can spell check and grammar check an email till it reads like an AP style book.
When writing to someone over the phone line, you're not going to stammer, stutter or slip up in the Freudian kind of way. It sounds so appealing, it's a wonder people converse at all.
Granted, it's easier to email my best friend in Australia rather than call her everytime I'm lonely. However, a 10-minute phone conversation once a week trumps a four paragraph email any day.

I have friends who would rather email the person in the next cubicle to them then stand up and talk.

And what happened to letter writing? Is the post office going to go the way of the Pony Express? There is some innate thrill to ripping open an envelope that clicking your "Inbox" can't muster. But writing a letter takes time, energy and thought, and who has the patience for that these days?
I'm afraid of what's happening to us. There's no longer an incentive to leave one's home. In fact, there's no motivation to ever leave the computer room. You can watch the rest of the house on the web cam, while ordering groceries to be delivered. You can read the day's newspaper online, while watching a cyber cast of your favorite artist.
It's come to the point where you think you know someone after you've read their profile on America Online. At the bars, phone numbers have been supplanted by email addresses. I don't understand the trend.
Maybe I'm part of a dying breed. I'm a people person. I enjoy interacting with humanity and revel in their, and my, faults. One of my favorite activities is "people watching" where I sit on a bench and watch people stroll by and wonder what's in their heads. I relish in trying to read people's emotions and discern where they came from.
I guess there is a subtle, yet entirely loathsome, way to show emotion on a computer screen. I've come to detest the smiling face of a colon and parenthetical symbol, :), or the way we now abbreviate all emotion, 'lol', which means laughing out loud.
Is there a solution to my quandary? No, not unless I contact Al Gore to un-invent the Internet. Maybe if you're reading this you can just email me with an idea...lol.
Evan Schiff is the staff reporter for the Cohasset Mariner.

No pedestal for Romney

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

It occurred to me the other day while reading the newspapers from left to right that someone is striving mightily to keep Mitt Romney's fledgling gubernatorial ambitions from getting off the ground. His campaign is barely two weeks old and it's already toast in some quarters.
Trouble is I can't figure out who is doing it, friend or foe.
The latest blast came from the left Sunday when the Boston Globe devoted a spot on Page 1 and a whole page inside to shooting down Mitt's chief claim to fame — his rescue of the 2002 Winter Olympic games from the bribery scandal that shook the original organizing committee.
His record at the Olympics, said the Globe, is "the foundation of his bid to become the next governor of Massachusetts. His supporters call him the 'white knight' who rode into Utah and rescued the games." This, said the Globe, "is one of several exaggerations and inconsistencies."
For good measure, the Globe speculated that Mitt used his influence to see that a friend of his landed the exclusive rights to build on privately owned land an Olympic attraction that drew up to 100,000 to his mall and made him eligible for millions in tax reimbursements.

All this before the ink is dry on Mitt's first speech as a candidate.

Would we want a man like that to be governor of Massachusetts? Heaven forbid!
A few days ago, the blast at Mitt came from the right when the Boston Herald discovered that his investment firm, Bain Capital, has a financial interest in a Utah pharmaceutical firm which manufactures several performance-enhancing drugs that are banned from the Olympics.
These revelations, said the Herald, "should provide fuel for Romney's political foes — eager to dull that shining image of a fix-it man who cleaned up the scandal-plagued Salt Lake games. They should also wound Romney's high image among at least a few Olympic enthusiasts."
Mitt had barely announced his candidacy March 19 when the Republican-leaning Herald dug up a union official who claimed that Mitt had used a non-union crew, half of whom came from outside the state, to film a political TV commercial at his Belmont home.
"If you run for office in Massachusetts you'd think people would hire locally, for catering or whatever function," Kevin Preston, business manager of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees local, was quoted as saying.
A couple of days later, a group called SARK (Showing Animals Respect & Kindness) got into the act, charging that Mitt had permitted the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association to rope calves and otherwise torture animals at a rodeo held in conjunction with the Olympics.
"There are a lot of people that care about animals in Massachusetts," said Steve Hindi of SARK. "We will make them very well aware of Mr. Romney's record here."
All this before the ink is dry on Mitt's first speech as a candidate. And there's more to come. Bet on it.
"Romney is a right-wing conservative Republican," said Philip Johnston, the leader of the state's Democrats. "Nobody's engaged him yet on issues. We will remind people where he stands."
As if they haven't already, whether they're right or wrong.

POLITICAL NOTES

Connolly to run for county treasurer

Joseph A. Connolly of Weymouth has announced his candidacy for Norfolk County Treasurer. Tim Cahill, the current county treasurer, is vacating the office to run for State Treasurer.
"The residents of Norfolk County deserve to have a treasurer that will proactively manage and safeguard the county's finances and its pension fund, particularly in light of the tight economic times we are facing," Connolly said.
Having worked for large and small businesses, state government and as a small business owner, Connolly believes that his diverse work experience and educational background provide him with a unique perspective on how to get things done. Connolly previously served as a legislative aide in the late Congressman Joseph Moakley's office, owned his own small business for several years and currently serves on the Weymouth Town Council as a Councilor-At-Large.
A resident of Weymouth for 11 years, Connolly is active in community service. He is currently a member of the Weymouth Lions Club, the Weymouth Elks, the Pond Plain Improvement Association and the High School Building Committee. As a Councilor-At-Large, Connolly serves as chairman of the Weymouth Town Council's Education Committee and the Committee on Public Works.
Connolly received a masters degree in public affairs from the McCormack Institute at the University of Massachusetts/Boston and a bachelors degree from Boston State College.
Connolly and his wife Elaine have two daughters, Taylor and Brigid.

Community preservation proposals get voters' OK

whether to reinstate the use variance, among other issues.

The CPA article, which may go down in history for its complexity, was divided into five parts, each of which required explanation. Three of the sections also necessitated presentations that, at times, were lengthy. However, despite challenging acoustics and a faltering public address system, voters apparently grasped the issues and voted to approve the proposed expenditures that include:

- $150,000 for design work, plans and construction at the historical society's Maritime Museum and Capt. John Wilson House in the village;
- $100,000 to supplement the money the town and Little League will provide to construct two ball fields at the Gavel Pits;
- $600,000 to be borrowed over 15 years to pay for an estimated half the cost of three lots off Beach Street adjacent to Great Brewster Woods.

Community Preservation Committee chairman Stuart Ivimey told the voters they did not have to worry about the state using CPA monies elsewhere to offset shortfalls.

"The fund is not based on an annual state appropriation," he said, adding there is $38 million currently in the state-matching fund that comes from fees paid to the registry of deeds when someone files a deed or mortgage.

"The money must be spent on furthering the CPA, not on the Big Dig," Ivimey said.

With a vote of 315-119, Town Meeting easily approved by the necessary two-thirds majority appropriating $600,000 toward the purchase of about 13 acres of Beach Street. The interest and principal payments for the 15-year bond issue would come out of the Community Preservation Fund Open Space Account.

But opposition to the expenditure was so vocal that it forced a hand count because the moderator was not sure he heard a clear majority in the voice vote.

The owner of two of the three parcels in question, Ellen Morrissey of 488 Jerusalem Road, said the effort is fruitless because she has no intention of ever selling her land to the town.

"It is very important that everyone here today knows this is my land, this is private property," she said. Morrissey said the town has held up her efforts to develop her property for 10 years resulting in two "existing" lawsuits.

Although Morrissey had her supporters, the majority was apparently convinced there were enough safeguards in the proposal to protect the town.

Ivimey, the Community Preservation Committee chairman, assured Town Meeting that there would be no eminent domain land taking and the town would not be on the hook for any more than the $600,000. If the price of the property exceeds the estimated $1.2 million, the citizens group partnering in the purchase would have to raise more money privately. If an agreement to buy the land can't be reached by March 2003, the town would withdraw support and no money would be spent, he said.

"We think this is a terrific idea for the addition of 20 acres to Brewster Woods in the downtown area and thus preserve it for future generations," Ivimey said. [Owners of seven acres adjacent to Great Brewster Woods have agreed to put a deed restriction on their property protecting it from development].

While the town can opt out of the Community Preservation Act after five years, it would still have to assess the surcharge to cover the bond payments, Ivimey said.

Mark DeGiacomo, 59 Beach St., speaking for the citizens group supporting the purchase of the land, said dramatic ledge is the feature of the property that makes it truly unique. He said the first volume of the Town History talks about the glacial forms at the site.

"From a geological point of view, the property is where the glacier stopped," he said. "That's why we see the dramatic ledge."

DeGiacomo said plans for just one of the lots includes blasting and removing some 2,000 tons of ledge.

"And that's just for the driveway for one house," he said. The Cohasset Land Conservation Trust, a private non-profit organization, has also pledged $100,000 toward the purchase of the property.

"Simply put, the property will be destroyed" if it's allow to be developed, DeGiacomo said.

But Morrissey, one of the property owners, disputed that and said the houses planned for her property would not be "McMansions" as alleged, but beautiful homes with spectacular views.

A majority of selectmen and the Advisory Committee backed the appropriation. They said trails would be delineated and linked to those in Great Brewster Woods, and there would be access and parking to the area behind Town Hall.

Museums

The Cohasset Historical Society does not have the assets to do capital improvements to its two village museums, the Capt. John Wilson House and the Maritime Museum, Ivimey told Town Meeting on Saturday.

"They are not handicap-accessible and until they meet requirements under the Americans with Disabilities Act, no federal or state money can be spent on restoring them," he said.

Tom Gruber of the historical society said any improvements to the structures, which are in the process of being added to the National Register of Historic Places, would be done with the guidance of a historic preservation architect. He also explained the Community Preservation Act requires any project follow the rigorous standards of the federal Department of the Interior. He said the handicap access would be constructed in such a way as to have the smallest impact.

Gruber said the Wilson house in particular needs a lot of restoration. Water running down the hillside behind the structure has rotted out the underpinnings of the house. The historical society, the architect and a sub-committee of the Community Preservation Committee would work as a team overseeing the work, he said.

Selectman Michael Sullivan, left, speaks to voters on Saturday. The Sullivan gym at the high school hosted its final Town Meeting. It will soon come down to make way for the middle-high school renovation project.

The $150,000 proposal easily passed muster with Town Meeting voters.

Little League fields

Voters also gave the OK for the Community Preservation Fund to donate $100,000 toward construction of ball fields in the town-owned gravel pits site off North Main Street. That money will be added to the $200,000 voters appropriated for the same purpose in another article, and $150,000 to be raised by Cohasset Little League, a private organization, for the $450,000 project.

Mark DeGiacomo, speaking for the Little League, called the plan a "public-private partnership with the town and Cohasset Little League."

Leonara Jenkins, 198 Jerusalem Road, asked why the Community Preservation Committee didn't approve the full $200,000 the Little League initially asked for. That way, she said, the town would only need to borrow $100,000 for the project. (Article 16, approved Monday by a two-thirds vote, authorizes the town to borrow up to $200,000 for the project).

Ivimey said the committee wanted to act conservatively.

"We wanted to husband our money the first several years to build up a nest egg. We didn't want to get over extended," he said. "We want to see what other projects there are out there."

There was also some concern expressed that the fields were being constructed for baseball and softball, when other sports need fields.

DeGiacomo explained the new ball fields would free up other fields in town for lacrosse and soccer. The new fields will also serve the baseball needs of the middle-high school whose existing baseball field will not be replaced after construction.

"We won't have baseball back up there," he said. "This will open those up for field hockey, soccer and lacrosse to both town and school use."

Under the Community Preservation Act, 10 percent of the monies accumulated in a town's Community Preservation Fund must go toward preserving open space, another 10 percent toward historic preservation, and 10 percent toward community housing. The remaining 70 percent can be spent for any of the above and recreation. Any money in the fund that is not appropriated can be banked for future years. Borrowing is also allowed with payments for interest and principal coming out of the fund, as could be the case with the Beach Street property.

Voters also approved two housekeeping measures under the CPA article including banking remaining money for future Town Meeting action and setting up the sub accounts to the divide the money among historic resources, open space, community housing and administration.

Ledge bylaw fails to win two-thirds majority vote

mended the article by a majority vote, it was the minority opinion of Selectman Michael Sullivan that may have swung voters.

Sullivan said there hasn't been a significant piece of ledge removed in the town in more than 40 years making this bylaw unnecessary. He estimated for someone to obtain a special permit to bypass the bylaw would cost them around $10,000 in engineering and other fees.

"This is a backyard situation that has gone way too far," he said referring to concerned Beach Street residents who are worried about development off their street.

Mark DeGiacomo, 59 Beach St., a proponent of the issue, said it was time to make restrictions on ledge removal before the town lost a large piece of rock which it would later regret. He also challenged Sullivan's belief that the effort needed to gain a special permit from the zoning board of appeals would cost $10,000.

"Our predecessors never had to worry about this problem," DeGiacomo said. "This bylaw attempts a minimum regulation of blasting and needs to be passed."

Opinions varied on the floor as residents bat the idea around.

One Atlantic Avenue resident felt the reason many people find Cohasset a desirable place to live is because of its school system and its beauty. She felt the town has done much to improve its school system over the last few years by undertaking a $41 million project and now was the time to concentrate on the scenery.

"If we fail to protect our ledge we will lose it," she exclaimed. "Let's take this opportunity and run with it."

Ann Brophy, 16 Atlantic Ave. and member of the Conservation Commission, said the issue of ledge was one that should be taken very seriously.

"When you remove ledge, you can't replace it," she said. "This is a major part of the community."

However, there were others in attendance on Saturday afternoon who felt both the intent and the wording of the article was faulty.

Roy Fitzsimmons, 116 Doane St., said there needed to be more time spent in the crafting of the bylaw. He felt there were plenty of undefined words in the article such as "substantially detrimental," and "injurious" that lawyers would have a field day ripping apart.

Glenn Pratt, a member of the Water Commission, said the article was overly restrictive. He said he didn't think the town should prevent residents from putting additions on their homes, which may involve some removal of ledge, if no one could see the rock anyway.

"I don't think amending the zoning bylaw should occur every Town Meeting because of the interest of a few people," he said.

A group of Beach Street residents and other concerned citizens proposed a similar article in the fall that was tabled until the annual Town Meeting so the Planning Board could give it more study.

In-house apartments, use variance

Zoning issues highlight continued Town Meeting session

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The continuation of Town Meeting to Monday saw the voting population dwindle from its Saturday gathering, but still some 200 residents came out to have their voices heard. The meeting got underway at about 7:30 p.m. and adjourned a stroke before 10 p.m. after a vote had been taken on all the articles.

Highlighting the beginning of the meeting were three zoning bylaws issues, which required a two-thirds majority vote to approve. Along with an accessory dwelling bylaw, voters tangled with use variance and zoning map articles.

The accessory dwelling article had the support of the selectmen, Advisory Committee and the Planning Board and all presented their cases to the voters. Sufficiently convinced that passing the bylaw would not turn Cohasset into a Mecca for apartments, residents passed the bylaw which is intended to keep residents in their homes who may otherwise not be able to afford to stay. Allowing 10 permits a year, the byalw sanctions an accessory dwelling unit in an owner-occupied home.

Planning Board member Robert Sturdy said this year there was enough time to work out the kinks in the article, that was flawed on a prior warrant.

"People need to understand this in an apartment not a two-family house," Sturdy said. "This is aimed at keeping people in town."

Selectman Ronnie McMorris, speaking on behalf of the majority opinion of the board, said this article is a step in the right direction toward solving the town's senior housing woes. She added if someone is unable to tell that an house is a two-family unit while passing by, there's no harm to the community.

"This recognizes that the town has senior citizens who need financial support to stay here," she said. "There are plenty of safeguards written into the bylaw to stop this from getting out of hand."

Some residents voiced concerns about how the bylaw would be enforced as well as worries that the apartments could get out of control.

"My concern is that this is opening up our entire town to family housing," said Selectman Michael Sullivan. "We need to have our eyes wide open on this issue."

Joseph Nedrow, a member of the Senior Housing Committee, tried to assuage voters fears and assured them the restrictions in the article would not allow Cohasset to turn into an apartment complex. Along with limiting the number of permits issued a year to 10, the bylaw restricts the size of the apartment and stipulates that the exterior appearance of the house cannot be altered except for a stairway, or an exit as required by law.

Nedrow said this is not a long-term solution to the problem but is certainly a help. The committee is currently looking at securing a 10-acre site off of Stop & Shop plaza where it hopes to build an affordable housing complex for seniors.

"This is a short-term way of generating money for some in town," Nedrow said. "It promotes a sense of community which is always welcomed."

Use variance

One of the more complex issues at Town Meeting failed to garner the necessary two-thirds support it needed to pass. The use variance bylaw, which would essentially reinstate the Zoning Board's ability to grant use variances under certain stringent conditions, was dismissed Monday night.

Although having the unanimous support of both the Advisory Committee and the selectmen, town officials were unable to convince voters of the importance of the issue. Under the current bylaw, which was only adopted last year, a use variance request will be brought before Town Meeting.

"This right was taken away from the Zoning Board before anyone knew what happened," said Selectman Tom Callahan. "It was slipped in as an amendment and there was never any serious debate about it."

Planning Board member Robert Sturdy, who proposed the amendment last year and was adamantly against the article, said the power to grant use variances should not be left up to a board of five people. He added that a use variance is so binding that if a person requires one, they should need to present their case in front of the town.

Ben Lacy, a member on the Zoning Board of Appeals, which had no official position on the article, said Cohasset is now in a unique position of being one of the few towns in the Commonwealth to not have the ZBA handle use variances.

"We're discussing a power which every other town has and we have never abused," he said. "We will always deal fairly and conservatively with all requests."

However, at least one resident voiced his opinion that voters would be giving up their rights if this article passed. He asserted residents would have an additional opportunity to discuss an issue if someone was making a plea for a use variance at Town Meeting.

"I don't think anyone here wants five people making a decision that could make a huge impact on an abutting property," the concerned resident said.

Howie Altholtz, 80 Summer St., felt giving the power to grant use variances to the ZBA was not an avenue the town should pursue.

"If this tool falls in the wrong hands it could be dangerous for Cohasset," Altholtz said. "I have the utmost respect for the ZBA but think this is something everyone in town should have a say in."

Zoning map

Despite the complexities of its two previous articles, the third zoning article passed without any debate Monday night. The article, which concerns Cohasset's zoning map asked residents to approve a change to the map which is now more detailed and accurate.

"This is a new digital, extremely accurate and comprehensive map of the town," said Sturdy of the Planning Board. "This provides residents with more of an exact idea of where their property lies."

The map also includes boundaries for the Flood Plain and Watershed Protection District.

New ball fields hit home run

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The fields of dreams have now become the fields of reality. Town Meeting appropriated $200,000 to the construction of two new ball fields at the Gravel Pits on N. Main Street on Saturday.. Because the article involves borrowing money, it needed a two-thirds majority to pass which it easily achieved, 192 to 61.

Mark DeGiacomo, proponent of the issue presented the article to the voters gathered at the high school gymnasium. Explaining that the fields would be a partnership between the town and Little League, DeGiacomo said it was imperative for the town to provide adequate facilities for its children.

> "It's going to be there for your children and their children to enjoy."
> — Dan Leahy, 215 Forest Ave.

"It's important for the town to provide good, safe playing fields," he said. "We need to improve the dangerous and ugly lot on N. Main Street."

Along with the money that was appropriated in this article, the Community Preservation Committee recommended spending $100,000 on the fields which was approved earlier in the day (see related story). The money the CPC appropriated to the cause was contingent on Town Meeting passing this article.

Despite the recognition of the need to improve the Gravel Pits, some residents were concerned that $200,000 was too much money to spend. Selectman Ronnie McMorris said the town should set its priorities.

"Our tax bills are high and they're only going up," she said. "Let's catch our breath, and unless a project is essential let's table it."

McMorris assured voters that she has been a supporter of Little League for the last 15 years and her opinions were not based on a dislike of the sport.

"This is not about baseball," she said. "This is about tough financial times."

The Capital Budget Committee recommended the article and noted that it was an exceptional use of capital to spend $200,000 to build a $450,000 project. Along with the CPC's money, Little League will be giving $150,000 to the project. The committee had concerns with the eyesore on N. Main Street and felt the fields would clean up the area.

"The education of our children extends well beyond the classroom," said a member of the board. "This town has precious little space for our children to play and needs more."

Dick Avery, member of the Advisory Committee which was split down the middle on the issue with one member abstaining, voiced his concerns that the fields are a single-use entity.

"It's too much money to be spending on a 'nice to have' item," he said. "This is a lot of money being spent on something not everyone can enjoy."

Proponents insisted the fields would get more use than just the Little League. They said the high-school softball teams will be using the fields and it will act as a supplement to Barnes Field.

"The money spent on this is pocket change over the life of the project," said Dan Leahy, 215 Forest Ave. "It's going to be there for your children and their children to enjoy."

DeGiacomo said with the money finally appropriated a contract could be signed as early as next week. He said he hopes to be opening the new fields at this time next year.

"I feel like a little kid who is rounding third base with the coach is waving me home," he said. "I'm so excited about this."

Self-professed computer geek starts own business

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Andy Trask is literally your neighborhood geek.

The Cohasset native started a computer support business called Geek Housecalls in which he, or any of his seven co-workers, visit customers' homes to assist them with their computer problems.

"People get disgusted being on hold for four hours on a computer-support line," he said. "That's were we come in, we can fix most problems in no time."

Trask lives in Marshfield but grew up in Cohasset and got his feet wet in the computer lab at Cohasset High School.

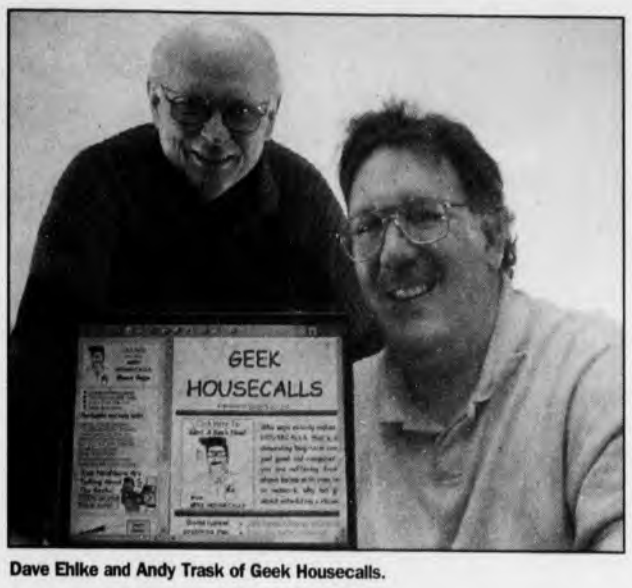
"Computers can be intimidating. We work with the customer and try to further their understanding."

— Andy Trask, Geek Housecalls

"My yearbook said I was going to have a computer dating service," he joked.

Trask, along with partner Dave Ehlke, started the business after constantly hearing complaints that people were sick of waiting hours on the phone for customer service. Both said while customers have fun with the name Geek Housecalls, feedback has been quite positive.

"We get called lifesavers quite a bit," Ehlke said. "The look of relief on people's faces when we leave is amazing."



Dave Ehlke and Andy Trask of Geek Housecalls.

Ehlke said in addition to fixing the problem, the Geeks provide training to enhance customers' ability to use and enjoy their computers. He added the business is customer-service oriented.

"We follow up every visit with a call to make sure things are still running smoothly," he said. "We are continually trying to make the experience a better one."

Trask agreed saying that an important aspect of the business is the experience of the customer. He said after working in the information technology business for more than 20 years he understands people's frustrations.

"Computers can be intimidating," he said. "We work with the customer and try to further their understanding."

The business started with a grassroots approach last July and has been growing steadily ever since. The duo said 60 percent of their business is of the repeat variety and has grown to include close to 200 customers.

"Three out of four people that call are by referrals," Trask said. "I guess that means were doing a pretty good job.

Geek Housecalls has seven employees, who are stationed all over the South Shore, in order to assist customers with problems. The company charges by the quarter-hour and most visits last between one and three hours. For more information you can visit the Web site at www.geekhousecalls.com or call at 781-863-8111.

Can the 300-year-old town green be improved?

Cohasset Common workshop planned

The Cohasset Common Historic District Commission is inviting townspeople to participate in a design workshop to improve the common. Preliminary research was presented to the Cohasset Common District Commission at its last meeting by the design firm of Carr, Lynch, / Denig, Hermann and Sandell, Inc.

A workshop is being planned; no date was set by press time. Call Garry Gardner, 1-781-383-9881 for additional information.

Upon recommendation of the commission, selectmen awarded a contract for design services to Carr, Lynch. The town voted at last fall's special town meeting to match funds awarded by the Massachusetts State Historic Landscape Preservation Design Grant Program for the purpose of preserving the historic landscape character of the common and to study its past, present and future uses.

The commission and community members listened as Carr, Lynch outlined the evolution of the common from the 1600s to present day with maps, drawings and early photographs showing the different ways the common has been used and how it's appearance has changed over the years.

Some at the meeting remembered when majestic elms lined both sides of South Main Street and Highland Avenue. Old photos showed Ballard and chain fencing surrounding the entire common and a flagpole between the First Parish Meeting house and the pond. All the old photos showed people enjoying activity on the common.

The next workshop, or "charrette" will feature initial design ideas for improving the common and adapting it to preserve its character.

The next workshop, or "charrette" will feature initial design ideas for improving the common and adapting it to preserve its character. Some suggestions for this workshop will include putting all electric and wire utilities underground, widening South Main Street and Highland Avenue to ease parking congestion on Sundays and special events. Also discussed were ideas for tree planting, one-way traffic, curbing, benches, and lighting.

All of these and more will be reviewed and discussed. Everyone is invited to attend to comment and participate. This is a chance to air your ideas about what you like and dislike about the common and what your thoughts are for improvement or, do you like the common the way it is?

Curt Kahn, Jason Moore and Kyle Weber
Kahn and Moore teamed for an overtime goal to lift the Cohasset boys lacrosse team past Hopkinton in Tuesday's season opener, 8-7. Goalie Weber paced the defensive effort with 14 saves.

Moore, Weber, Kahn pace boys in 8-7 sudden death win over Hopkinton

Two minutes into sudden-death overtime, junior attackman Curt Kahn broke up a Hopkinton clear, picked up the loose ball, and found senior Jason Moore alone on the edge of the crease. Moore whipped it by the charging Hilltopper goalie, and the Skippers emerged with a tough opening day win over the Tri-Valley League pre-season favorite, 8-7.

Senior co-captain Kyle Weber led a defense that effectively shut down all but one Hopkinton player— the 2001 Tri-Valley scoring champion, Ken Lysik— who found the back of the net five times. Weber finished with 14 saves, nine in the first half as Cohasset– apparently feeling the effects of a one-and-a-half hour bus ride— were outshot 20-15. Down 2-0 after just over three minutes, the Skippers got on the board when Kahn took a feed from Moore behind the goal and tucked his first shot of the game into the upper corner. A second Lysik goal pushed the Hopkinton lead back to two, but a Kahn drive and finish with 24 seconds left in the quarter narrowed the margin.

In the first minute of the second period, junior midfielder Matt Davis collected on another individual move, tying the game. Hopkinton would never lead again. Forty-one seconds later, senior midfielder Dave DeVito – who would alternate between a long- and short-stick – found a loose ball five yard off the crease and in one fluid move flicked it by Hilltopper goalie MacDonald. Then, at the four-minute mark, senior midfielder Eric Libby picked up the first of a pair of scores on a feed from Davis.

The long and short of things

Girls tennis team eyes monster campaign, while boys rebuild on the fly

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

A message to the rest of the South Shore League: watch out for the Cohasset girls tennis team.

While the boys are undergoing a complete reconstruction of the team after last year's graduation left 2002s squad depleted, the girls appear to stand poised for one of the best seasons a Cohasset sport has seen in quite some time.

After beating Norwell late in the season for a share of the SSL title, the girls team lost only Ari Afshar to graduation, and gained some serious freshman firepower. Having made the tournament every year during coach Sarah Meehan's 11-year tenure, the Lady Skippers have their sights set on something more.

"With all the motivation and skill we have on this team, we are certainly aiming high," confessed junior captain Lindsay Grossman, a two-time South Shore League All-Star and All-Scholastic athlete who will likely assume the number one position after compiling a 29-1 record the past two years at first and second singles. She went undefeated in league play last year, beating heavy hitting Norwell junior Sarah Bitetti twice, and losing only to Bourne's temperamental phenom, the ace of a team that went on to win the South Sectionals.

With all the motivation and skill we have on this team, we are certainly aiming high."
Cohasset girls top singles player Lindsay Grossman

Because inclement weather has severely restricted practice time over the past two weeks, neither team has come close to setting their line-ups. The girls team, though, can truly claim having at least six players who would be the number one on many other teams in the area.

Freshmen Elizabeth Stone and Kate Englander provide exceptionally strong play, as both are ranked regionally for singles. Stone was one of five New England ladies in her age group to go to Zonals, a national competition for the country's top players, and Englander has developed a fearsome power game rarely seen in women's high school tennis.

Junior Julie Shea, voted an All-Star last Spring after a very impressive campaign at second singles, may move to doubles this year as she recovers from a knee injury she suffered this past Fall. Shea could very well combine with Englander for a frightening doubles team.

Sophomores Holly Graham and Emily Sullivan have both developed their games. Either would have a legitimate shot at going undefeated at third singles, or teaming up for second doubles once the playoffs start.

Senior captain Kelly Stone, who has picked up invaluable doubles points the last few seasons, provides great experience for the young team.

"Our team has incredible depth," observed Grossman, "creating

Cohasset Race-by-the-Sea Sunday

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The 26th Cohasset Road Race-by-the-Sea will be run this Sunday, with the start scheduled for 1 p.m..

This scenic 10-K run has clearly become one of New England's favorites in recent years, the course taking runners past long stretches of Cohasset's beautiful shorelines.

The race starts near the town common on Highland Ave, moves to Elm Street, then to Atlantic Ave., to the coastal end of Jerusalem Road, to Forest Ave., to North Main Street and, finally, back to the Common for the finish.

More than 600 runners participated in last year's April 1 race, a raw and blustery day that saw Kingston's John Noland win for the second consecutive year with a time of 32:47, and improvement of 25 seconds off his 2000 race time. Cohasset's own Dyan Young won the women's race with a time of 43:13.

The all-time male race record is held by Boston's John Kesstinger, his 1980 time of 29:30 still standing as the mark to beat 22 years later.

Cohasset's own Sarah Linsley, who won the female race in its first seven years, owns the women's record with her 1983 time of 33:25.

There is also a 5k walk that starts at 10 a.m..

Run and walk registration fee is $18.00.

The race is listed on the "Cool Running" Web site calendar (www.coolrunning.com). Information can also be obtained on the race Website www.cohassetroadracebythesea.com. This is a USATF - NE sanctioned race.

Applications are in the back of the Rotary Telephone Book for Cohasset. Runners can also register on the Web site. Applications are available at Curtis Liquors, Nobles, Cohasset Good Sport and other locations at the end of February beginning of March.

Once again, the Cohasset Rotary Club will sponsor the race, with proceeds going to a Rotary scholar-

8th-grade hoopsters fall just short in three-peat bid

Cohasset eighth-grade girls basketball team narrowly missed winning its third straight Old Colony League title Saturday, losing to Duxbury in overtime 28-24.

Cohasset was down by nine points at halftime and by 12 midway through the third quarter. The team then switched to a man-to-man defensive coverage and went on 12-0 run to tie the game and force overtime.

With 23 seconds left in regulation, Chelsea Grossman made a 12-foot jump shot and was fouled. This brought the team to within two points. Grossman missed the free throw, but Mia Lieb-Lappen followed up the shot, grabbing a big rebound and scored immediately to tie the game. There were 10 seconds left and Duxbury was unable to score.

In overtime, the Skippers had little left and Duxbury scored two quick baskets to take the win.

Five players scored for Cohasset. In addition to Lieb-Lappen and Grossman, Jenn Dinger, Caitlin James and Lisa Musto all made big baskets down the stretch.

Callie Ernst and Lisa Musto did an excellent job contending with the big Duxbury centers and forwards for rebounds.

Aly Belz and Katrina Reardon's defense was a major reason the Skippers stayed in the game. They were both instrumental in forcing many turnovers and giving the Skippers additional chances.

The Cohasset girls have played in the Old Colony League for three years. They won the title in the sixth and seventh grades. This year, they were seeded third behind Braintree and Duxbury.

Two weeks ago, they beat Braintree by two points. Mia Lieb-Lappen drained two free throws with 1.8 seconds left to win the game and send the Skippers to the Championship game for the third year in a row. Playing the undefeated Duxbury team, Cohasset nearly pulled off a major upset and won again.

Coaches Ed Lappen and Jeff Grossman were very proud of their team's comeback.

"They never gave up," said Grossman.

"They left it all on the court," Lappen echoed, "and I am very proud of them."

Mariner All-Scholastic boys basketball team

Cohasset's Bilodeau and Maitland named among area's elite

As usual, selecting a set number of players to this team was no easy task. We had an abundance of boys hoop talent in Marinerland this winter, the most evident indications of this being the successes of Norwell (20-2), Abington (18-2) and Scituate (18-2)—teams which each placed three members on our all-scholastic team.

Exceptional campaigns were also turned in by a handful of athletes from Rockland, Silver Lake, Hanover, Hingham, Cohasset and Marshfield high schools, and we've done our best to recognize those as well.

A few of the players you see listed below as "Honorable Mentions" also received strong consideration for this team. However, after consulting with area coaches, players and other close observers, these are the 16 players we felt deserved to be recognized as our area's best.

Jesse McKinnell - Senior (Capt.)
Center - Scituate

Jesse McKinnell

An extremely talented player who was often at his best in big games…6-foot-5 with long arms…exceptionally intense competitor…a late bloomer who didn't even play basketball much before his freshman year…three time Patriot League All-Star… Jesse will play basketball at the collegiate level… is talking to a handful of coaches from Div. 2 collegiate programs (including St. Anselm) and a couple of smaller Div. 1 teams, such as UNH and Vermont, where he has been accepted and visited… often rose to the occasion in big games, such as the two showdowns with Patriot League arch-rival Rockland this season, finishing with a combined 58 points and 40 boards… scored 23 points and grabbed 21 boards in thrilling overtime win over Norwell in the Div. 3 semifinals…owns his own boat and works in the summer as a commercial lobsterman…an avid skier…Scituate head coach Matt Poirier: "Jesse obviously has a lot of talent, but he never would have realized that without an incredible amount of work and devotion. Jesse has come so far as player and person. He takes his emotion out in the right way now. It's a motivating tool."

Mike Barry - Senior (Capt.)
Forward - Scituate

Mike Barry

This relentless banger and interior defender was also the Sailors top 3-point specialist this season…hit over 50 treys on the season, converting on better than 40 percent of his attempts…hit six 3-pointers in last month's thrilling sectional semifinals win over Norwell and finished that game with a team high 24 points… a Patriot League All-Star… also a standout football and baseball player for Scituate High…football is probably the best sport for this tight end/defensive end…a two time Patriot League All-Star in football and a Mariner All-Scholastic selection this year…has been offered at least one athletic scholarship opportunity, but is leaning heavily toward attending Northfield Mount Herman Preparatory Academy next fall in an effort to drum up more interest from college recruiters… Scituate head coach Matt Poirier: "Mike worked extremely hard to become the type of player he was this season. He's not the most vocal guy, but he was a great leader by example. He was a total team player. He rebounded hard and worked hard on the inside and was a very good team defender. He was a great help side defender."

Tom Cuddihy - Sophomore Guard - Scituate

Tom Cuddihy

An extremely gifted athlete who gave up football in order to concentrate year round on basketball…the lefty can score from anywhere…he is deadly accurate from behind the 3-point arc as well as on pull up jumpers, but he is arguably at his best when going all the way to the basket…also a master at drawing contact on the drive and finishing the shot…led the Patriot League in scoring this season with an 18.6 points per game average…averaged 25 points per in the Sailors four post-season games, bringing his overall season average to 20 points per game…capped off his sophomore campaign with a performance for the ages, scoring 11 of his game high 30 points (to go along with a handful of assists, rebounds and steals) during a Sailors 26-6 second half run in the Div. 3 south sectional championship game, leading Scituate all the way back to tie Wareham. Unfortunately, the Sailors (with center Jesse McKinell and point guard Greg Levin having fouled out) were unable to complete the comeback… scored season high 35 points in tourney's opening round win over Norton, and 31 in second round win over Carver…Patriot League All-Star…plays AAU basketball year round for the prestigious Coastal Pops program, along with several other top area sophomores, including fellow Mariner All-Scholastic selectees Joe Coppens (Rockland) and John Mohan (Norwell)…. runs spring track for Scituate High along with senior sister Kiely, a perennial Patriot League winter and spring all-star…Tom competes in the javelin, discus and 4x100-meter relay… Scituate head coach Matt Poirier: "Tom is obviously a very good player. But, as good as he is, he could get even better. He will be a leader for us next year, and he could be a captain as a junior. But he's got to earn it. He really has some challenges ahead of him. He needs to continue to work at everything on and off the floor."

Gerry Corcoran - Junior (Capt.)
Forward - Norwell

Gerry Corcoran

Clearly one of the most physically talented players in all of Massachusetts…the athletic 6-foot-5 shooter and ballhandler extraordinaire finished eighth in the Eastern Mass scoring race this season, averaging 26 points per game…upped that to 30 points per in three state tourney games, leading the Clippers to the semifinals, where they lost a heartbreaker in overtime to Scituate despite Gerry's game high 29-point effort…helped the Clippers to a 20-2 regular season and the number one seed in the Div. 3 South Sectional Tournamnet…went over 40 points twice this season, tossing down 43 against Carver and 42 versus Cohasset…became a much more complete player this season, as he worked hard to not only vary his offensive game, but to become a better assistman, rebounder and defender…averaged close to 11 boards per game, and had several games where he notched close to double figure assists…an absolutely scintillating passer in transition…Gerry is an excellent long-range sniper, but he is at his best offensively working off the dribble and taking it strong to the hoop… closing in on the 1,600-point mark, Gerry is on a pace to easily surpass the 2,000-point career plateau and shatter Norwell High's all-time record of 1,800 (held by former teammate Dan McNamara)…three-time South Shore League All-Star…also a Boston Globe, Boston Herald and Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic selection…plays AAU basketball year round in the BABC program…has already received letters from several universities with prominent Div. 1 basketball programs, including schools from the prestigious Big East, Atlantic-10 and Conference U.S.A.…Norwell coach John Willis: "We all know what a special player Gerry is, but what really impressed me this year was how he concentrated on becoming a better rounded player. He wasn't just satisfied with scoring 30 points per game. He took the rest of his game to the next level."

Bob Savoy - Senior (Capt.)
Point Guard - Norwell

Bob Savoy

Was there a faster, scrappier or better defending guard on the South Shore the last few years than Bob Savoy? Norwell coach John Willis doesn't believe so, and he had a lot of people in his corner…Bob also worked hard to become a well rounded point guard…averaged 12 points, eight assists, six rebounds and four steals per game this season for the 20-2 Clippers…was the team's sixth man as a sophomore, and moved in to the starting lineup for good as a junior… South Shore League All-Star, making him a multi-sport league all-star…the pitcher/shortstop for the NHS baseball team is a two-time SSL all-star…has also played football and golf for NHS teams, and American legion baseball…would like to continue playing baseball and/or basketball at the next level, and likely will attempt to do so if he winds up at Bentley or Trinity, two schools by which he's already been accepted…has also applied to UMass-Amherst…is leaning toward majoring in Business…Norwell coach John Willis: "Bobby is the best defender I've ever coached. He's also a total team player. The way he could drive to the basket, he was almost unstoppable. He could have scored a lot more if he wanted to, but he was the point guard and he took a lot of pride in setting up others to score. I think he had a fantastic year, and I think he should have received a lot more consideration for all-star teams than he did."

John Mohan - Sophomore Guard - Norwell

John Mohan

This sophomore plays with a court sense that belies his age…as well-rounded a 15-year old hoopster as you're likely to find— John is an excellent ballhandler, shooter, scorer and passer…he is also a far more effective rebounder and inside player than his 5-foot-10, 155 pound frame might suggest… plays AAU basketball year round for the prestigious Coastal Pops program, along with several other top area sophomores, including fellow Mariner All-Scholastic selectees Joe Coppens (Rockland) and Tom Cuddihy (Norwell)…averaged right around 14 points per game, and proved an extremely effective second option to help free up superstar Gerry Corcoran (26 points per game) for the 20-2 Clippers…also an excellent football player, he split the starting quarterback duties this season…little brother of Steve and Mike (NHS class of 2001), also football and basketball standouts for Norwell… Norwell coach John Willis: "He sure didn't play like a sophomore. He's just got a great head on his shoulders, and that's really true when it comes to basketball. Johnny is another player who could have probably averaged 20 points a game if he wanted. He's just an extremely unselfish player who wants to do what's best for the team."

Ryan Dacey - Senior (Capt.)
Guard - Silver Lake

Ryan Dacey

His value to the Lakers became most evident when he missed the final three weeks of the season with a knee injury, and his team went 1-5 to finish at 8-10, one win shy of post-season qualification…the 5-foot-11, 175 pound guard moved from his more natural point guard role to shooting guard this season to provide more scoring for the Lakers and came through big time, averaging 18.6 point per game, finishing with excellent conversion rates from the floor (55 percent), three-point land (47 percent) and free throw line (over 80 percent)…also finished second on the team in assists and steals, and was tops in charges taken with 15…named to the Old Colony League All-Star team, finishing third in the voting among OCL coaches…as good a spot up shooter as he is, Dacey is clearly at his best going strong, using his exceptional quickness and ballhandling to get in close and then his burly frame to finish…with Ryan in the starting lineup going back to his sophomore year, the Lakers went 43-11 and won two OCL championships…proved what kind of athlete he was by going out for high school football for the first time ever this fall, emerging quickly as the Lakers top receiver and earning an Old Colony League all-star berth…also played baseball as a freshman, but decided to drop that in favor of playing year-round AAU basketball…will likely play college basketball next season…is leaning toward accepting an offer from Framingham State, whose coaches have already informed him he may have a shot at the starting point guard job next winter…has also spoken with coaches from Springfield State and Suffolk… Silver Lake boys basketball coach Dick Arieta: "Ryan is a very well-rounded player, and he's one of the best north-south guards I've ever had, and I've had some good ones."

Derek Wigman - Junior Forward - Silver Lake

Derek Wigman

Emerged from a bench role in to a star for the Lakers in his junior year to average 16 points per game and a team best 8.1 rebounds per…the 6-foot-2, 190 pound power forward possesses great hands, a soft shooting touch, superior leaping ability and one of the quickest first steps on the South Shore, all of which help him regularly school considerably larger players on the interior, as witnessed by this year's field goal rate of 57 percent…also very good at drawing contact and converting on his chances from the line (77 percent)…named to the Old Colony League All-Star team, finishing sixth in the voting among coaches… plays AAU basketball in the off-season for the South Shore Patriots…Silver Lake boys basketball coach Dick Arieta: "Derek is extremely strong and knows how to use those big shoulders. He's got a lot of tools, but I'd say his best asset is that first step. There weren't too many people who could handle that straight up."

James Smith - Senior (Capt.)
Guard/Small Forward - Abington

James Smith

A three-year starter, Smith led the talented Green Wave (19-3) squad in scoring with an average 20.1 ppg, which placed him third among the South Shore League leaders… Whether it be driving to the hoop, pulling up for a jumper, or nailing a clutch three-pointer, Smith was the clear go-to man on the Abington squad, which tied rival Norwell for the SSL title…The senior capped his career as Abington's all-time leading male scorer with 975 points…Smith led the Green Wave in minutes played and was the team's best free throw shooter with an average of 80.5…He was second in assists and steals, and also averaged 6.5 rebounds per game…Was the tourney MVP in the Green Wave Invitational and was received the team's "Morey Award" at the annual banquet…A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic, Smith plans to attend Rhode Island College or Cushing Academy Prep. School where he will continue his basketball career. Abington coach Don Byron: "James is a real all-around player. Defensively, he was always on our opponent's best player. He loves to play and is enthusiastic which consistently rubbed off on the other kids. He's an unselfish player and is a great teammate."

Tom McSharry - Senior (Capt.)
Guard - Abington

Tom McSharry

At 6'3", McSharry was among the team's biggest threats both inside the paint and from behind the arch, helping Abington (19-3) attain a share of the South Shore League title with Norwell and an appearance in the quarterfinals of the Div. 3 South Sectional tourney… Among the Green Wave's top scorers, McSharry averaged 14.8 points per game, in addition to pulling down an average 7 rebounds per game (second on the team)…A South Shore League All-star, the senior was a 49 percent shooter from the field…McSharry received the team's "Sportsmanship Award" at the annual banquet…McSharry also made the Mariner All-Scholastic team in football last fall and is competes on the outdoor track team in the spring…In addition to athletics, McSharry is also the AHS senior class president…The captain is considering four colleges (Bridgewater State, Worcester State, Assumption, and Suffolk) where he will continue either his football or basketball career. Abington coach Don Byron: "Tom is a great athlete. He runs and jumps well. He is highly respected both by the league and at the high school. He's a very humble kid and is very coachable."

Marc Sulmonte - Senior (Capt.)
Point-Guard - Abington

Marc Sulmonte

Extremely quick and deadly on a fast-break, Sulmonte was often the guy to turn things around offensively in a game for the South Shore League co-champion Green Wave (19-3)…A two-year starter and three-year varsity player, Sulmonte was the team's leader in steals with 45…Noted by his coach as being a "terrific leader", Sulmonte was instrumental in Abington's getting to the quarterfinals of the Div. 3 South Sectional tourney…An SSL All-star, Sulmonte recently received the team's "Coach's Award" at the annual banquet…Sulmonte is making his first appearance on the All-Scholastic hoop squad, but made our soccer team last fall...Abington coach Don Byron: "Since his sophomore year, Marc has been a very important part of what we do on the court. He's very quick and can go end to end on a breakaway. He really set the pace for the team. He's a terrific leader and isn't afraid to get on kids."

Matt McDonald - Senior (Capt.)
Center - Rockland

Matt McDonald

At 6'2", 230 pounds, McDonald was the Bulldogs' big man inside the paint, leading the team in rebounds with an average nine per game… Constantly muscling his way to the hoop and up for a board, the senior was among the team's leading scorers, averaging 14 ppg…Playing on a weak ankle throughout the year, McDonald's performance this season, helped Rockland advance to its third consecutive appearance in the Div. 3 South Sectional semifinals…Was a dominating force in the final stretch and into the post-season, averaging 18 ppg and 11 boards in the last 12 games…Was also the team's second-best free throw shooter, averaging 78 percent…A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic in basketball and football, McDonald was a member of the RHS 2000 Div. 3 Super Bowl champion team…The talented senior plans to attend Springfield College, where he will continue his football career. Rockland coach Bob Fisher: "Matt is just so tough mentally, physically, and emotionally. He's so focused that he refuses to lose. He does whatever it takes to persevere. We won games that we had no right to win because of him. He was the pulse and the heart of this team."

Joe Coppens - Sophomore Guard - Rockland

Joe Coppens

A rising star on the always talented Rockland squad, Coppens (6 feet, 150 pounds) had a breakout season for the Patriot League champions…Just a sophomore, Coppens led the Bulldogs in scoring with an average 16.5 ppg, which placed him second among the PL leaders…An undeniable force, particularly from behind the arch, Coppens can do just about everything…Quickly established himself as a go-to player for Rockland by scoring 30 points in an overtime win over PL rival Scituate…While his offensive skills are obviously impressive, so too was the youngster's defense…This was noted in the team's win over second-seeded neighbor Abington in the quarterfinals of the Div. 3 South Sectional tourney…Was the team's top free throw shooter, averaging 80 percent…A PL All-star, Coppens will be among the team's top returnees next season. Rockland coach Bob Fisher: "Joe is one of the better shooters in the league. He plays as hard in practice as he does in games. He's focused and he values every second on the floor. He has all the attributes: intelligence, attitude, disposition. He has all his pins in place, and I know they'll stay that way."

Center - Marshfield

Mike Sullivan

At 6'4", Sullivan was the go-to man on the Marshfield squad…Despite the team's struggles to adjust to the highly-competitive Old Colony League this season, Sullivan had an impressive winter campaign and emerged as one of the OCL's top players inside the paint…Sullivan was the leading scorer on the Rams squad with an average 12 ppg…The junior also led the team in rebounds with 12.5 rpg…A terror on the defensive boards, Sullivan was continually able to get things going for the team in transition…He was also consistently stayed out of foul trouble, while still playing aggressive under the basket…Sullivan's efforts this season earned him the team's MVP award…He is a member of the National Honor Society and competes on an AAU team…He will captain the MHS team again next season. Marshfield coach Ron Jamieson: "Mike always did his job. He stayed out of foul trouble, which had been a problem in the past. He didn't spend too much time off the court. He was definitely someone our opponents had to contend with."

Rob Schuler - Junior
Point-guard - Hanover

Rob Schuler

Was the driving force behind Hanover's impressive run in the Patriot League this season…The 5-foot, 5-inch point guard played in every game this season and ran the floor for the Indians squad…Quickly emerged as the team's leader and consistently had the ability to play big when Hanover needed it most…Scored 31 points in the team's season-ending win over Bishop Stang in the Abington Tourney, sinking the foul shots that gave the Indians a trip to the Div. 3 South Sectional tourney…The junior averaged 11 points per game for Hanover, was a highly consistent three-point shooter and averaged 75 percent at the free throw line…A Patriot League All-star, Schuler has already been elected a captain for next season…Also a talented soccer player, Schuler received an Honorable Mention to the All-Scholastic squad last fall. Hanover coach Mark Malloy: "He's a hard-nosed, tough kid. He hardly ever came off the floor. He ran our team as point guard and was consistently directing people to be in the right spots. He's already a great leader."

Greg Sowyrda - Senior Forward/Guard - Hingham

Greg Sowyrda

A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic, Sowyrda (6'4") was a shining star on the Hingham squad…A highly-talented forward, Sowyrda was the team's second-leading scorer with 12 points per game and led the team in rebounds with an average 9 per game…Whether it be muscling his way to the hoop or sinking a key jump shot, Sowyrda consistently came up big for the Harbormen…Also a solid defensive player, Sowyrda was always put on the opponent's best player…Also a talented defenseman for the HHS lacrosse team, Sowyrda helped lead the squad to a State Championship last season and was named to our Mariner lax team…The senior is considering attending college with the hopes of continuing his lacrosse career. Hingham coach Dan Clune: "He was the heart and soul of our team. Greg was a great inside player and our best defensive player. Whoever we wanted to stop on the other team is whoever he'd play."

Cohasset's Pete Maitland (12) made a huge leap this season, going from a JV guard to a strong candidate for Mariner All-Scholastic honors before being named an Honorable Mention selection.

Boys track team starts championship defense on right foot, while girls come up just short

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The defending SSL Champion Cohasset boys track team opened their season this past Tuesday with a decisive win over Norton, sending a message to the South Shore that they are in the hunt to repeat as league champs.

As is so often the case with the "larger" SSL schools, Norton was able to stack almost every event with the maximum number of competitors, putting great pressure on the minute-by-comparison Skippers.

Because the scoring awards five points to first, three to second and one to third, the Skippers need to take first in nearly every event to stay ahead of the Lancers, who piled on seconds and thirds with their roster of 50 athletes.

Senior captain Tim Baird led Cohasset in the distance events, winning the two-mile with little trouble. He then qualifyied for States with his first place run of 4:40 in the one-mile.

Junior Jared Krupczak won the 200-meters in 24.7 seconds, becoming the first Skipper other than his brother Brian (who graduated last year) to win the event in three years.

Since these were the only three individual running events the Skippers won, Norton entered the field events ahead by 11. Cohasset's strength has typically been on the track in recent years, making the deficit seem insurmountable.

But the Skippers responded to the challenge, winning every field event, and taking a second or third in addition in each.

Senior captain Pete Maitland surprised nobody in winning the javelin, qualifying for States with a throw of 169-feet. He also took third in the high jump behind first place finisher, senior teammate Liam Martin.

Juniors Ian Kidder and Krupczak won the triple jump and long jump, respectively, with Baird taking second place in both events.

Senior captain Steve Laney took five points in the discus with a winning throw of 117 feet, and senior captain Jason Brown took the top spot in the shot put.

The Skippers entered the relays with a sizable lead, and sealed the meet with a win in the 4x100-meter relay, the team of Kidder, Krupczak, Laney and Brown taking eight points in the 76-58 win.

The girls track team performed very well in their season opener against the Lady Lancers, but were taken down by the larger and more experienced visitors.

The girls track team, which features no seniors and only two juniors, has myriad underclassmen that are primed to make this team very competitive in the coming years.

Junior captain Maura O'Brien won the discus with a toss of 74 feet, and qualified for states with a 5-feet high jump effort that took second. O'Brien also took third in the 100 hurdles and second in the 300 hurdles despite falling over the third hurdle.

But the Skippers responded to the challenge, winning every field event, and taking a second or third in addition in each.

Sophomore captain Jen Buckley won the mile with a time of 6:01, and the javelin with an impressive throw of 88'9".

Buckley's sophomore co-captain Gillian Weber won the 800-meters with a time of 2:42, and took third place in the triple jump.

Sophomore Shelley Carter finished just ahead of Weber in the triple jump, taking second, and also won the 100-meter hurdles.

Freshman Nicole Whitney made a great varsity debut by winning the 400-meters and combining with sophomore Leah McMorris and freshmen Mary Silvia and Lindsey Kennedy to win the 4x400 relay.

While the Cohasset girls are eyeing a steady climb through the South Shore League ranks, the boys are hoping to compete for another league title this Spring.

SSL newcomer Mashpee won the team States last year, and Carver and Abington appear just as loaded as they were last year.

If the first meet was any indication, the boys should be right in the thick of what is shaping up to be tight and exciting race to the top.

comfortable flexibility among the positions."

On the boys side, five of the top seven on last year's team are no longer in the picture due either to graduation or opting for another sport.

Cohasset junior Holly Graham is one of several players jockeying for positioning on loaded girls tennis team.

Fortunately for the program, the two remaining veterans from last year's team— junior captain David Ingber and sophomore Jesse Brewer— have helped recruit a sizable roster, including other sport converts.

Ingber, an SSL All-Star and Mariner All-Scholastic player from a year ago, will likely move away from first doubles this year, as his partner Jeff Scribner graduated.

"Our team has incredible depth, creating comfortable flexibility among the positions."
Junior captain Lindsay Grossman

Brewer gained valuable experience on last year's 8-5 playoff team, starting nearly every match at either second doubles or third singles.

Newcomers for the squad include juniors Ross Lieb-Lappen and Scott Faber, both track converts. Lieb-Lappen and Faber both have experience playing tennis, but never at the varsity level. Their height and athleticism should prove very effective in rushing the net for singles or doubles.

Sophomore Tim Anton, a former baseball Skipper, has proved early on in practices he has the skills to play very competitively in the SSL, probably at singles.

Junior Bryan Bilton, and sophomores Andrew Buske and Drew Hertig round out the rookies who will be extremely important to this short-benched team, and will likely be looked upon to pick up points at third singles and second doubles.

The boys team will spend the year attempting to overcome the downsides of playing a non-established sport for a tiny high school. Yet, while newcomers make up the bulk of the squad, a core of solid eighth graders patiently wait their turn at varsity experience for the coming years. As of right now, making it back to the tournament with a .500 record would be a victory in and of itself.

For the girls, the goals are loftier, but this team seems quite capable of living up to them.

We make a great pair.

Cohasset Youth Lax is ready to go

The boys and girls youth lacrosse program is set to begin their Spring 2002 season after recently completing several indoor pre-season practice sessions at the Canton SportsPlex. This year our program has expanded significantly with over 180 boys and girls participating. In the boys program, we have 2 teams in both the Under 10 and Under 12 age levels and single team in the Under 14 level. This year we have also launched a girls youth program with a team at both the Under 12 and Under 14 age groups. All of the teams will be playing an 8 – 12 game season hosting and traveling to other towns in the South Shore region including Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket as well as perennial favorites Scituate, Duxbury, and Marshfield. The season kicks off on Sunday April 7th and we encourage everyone to come out and enjoy a great day of fun watching the "fastest game on foot". Home games are played at Miliken Field on most Sunday afternoons. For complete schedules and field directions, please visit our website at www.cohaassetlacrosse.com.

Moore, Weber, Kahn pace laxers

"That sequence was one of the few sustained periods of good play we had today," said head coach Kevin Orcutt. "Hopkinton is the best Tri-Valley team we've ever seen, and this was as much adversity as I'd ever want to face in an opener, but we weren't sharp."

Hopkinton, on Lysik's third goal, tied the game 17 seconds before halftime. But the third quarter was all Cohasset's, as they shut out the Hillers and got goals from Libby and Kahn to give themselves another two-goal lead.

"We got good play in the third from two newcomers," said Orcutt. "Junior midfielder John Durkin was a force all day with his defensive commitment, his clears and his speed. And senior defenseman Chris Caron, who hadn't played since, what, fifth grade, was aggressive and steady, as if he'd been doing this his entire high school career."

The Hilltoppers, again led by Lysik, made another run in the fourth period, and tied the game at 7-all with two minutes to play. A flurry of turnovers and penalties sent both into overtime, setting the scene for the Kahn-to-Moore finale.

"It would have been a long, long bus ride if we'd lost," said Orcutt, "but I hope no one on this team takes too much satisfaction from our play. With Norwell and Milton Academy on the horizon, we have to get smarter and better."

The Skippers were scheduled to travel to Norwell today (Thursday) for their Pilgrim League opener, then to go to Milton Academy for a non-league contest on Saturday at 11 am. Cohasset will host Scituate on Tuesday, April 9 in their 2002 home opener.

The artwork is due by April 12 at Rep. Delahunt's office in Quincy or Hyannis. The categories for entries include paintings, drawings, prints, mixed media, photographs and computer graphics. The winning entry will be shipped to Washington, DC to be displayed for a full year in the US Capitol. In addition, the student whose work is selected to represent southeastern Massachusetts will be offered $12,000 scholarship from the Savannah College of Art and Design in Georgia.

The judges are Betsy Bennett, a Harwich artist and former instructor at the Cape Cod Art Association; Nancy Colella of Norwell, a painter and art coordinator of the James Library and Center for the Arts gallery in Norwell; and Mike Sleeper, landscape and portrait photographer from Marshfield.

ADL to host seder

The Anti-Defamation League announced it will host the 7th Annual South Shore Family Interfaith Seder at Congregation Sha'aray Shalom in Hingham on April 7 at 3 p.m. Rabbi Steven Karol will lead the Seder, assisted by colleagues from the Hingham-Hull Religious Leaders Association.

This year's Seder will focus on the South Shore's participation in the ADL's No Place for Hate program. Guest speaker and ADL executive director, Robert Leikand will discuss the relevance of Passover to all faiths and the significance and impact of the No Place for Hate campaign. Seder participants will have the opportunity to learn more about what local communities are doing to encourage and support tolerance and what it takes to become a certified No Place for Hate community.

"The fact that the Seder is so well attended every year by people of all faiths is one very strong example of how sharing religious practices and discussions establishes and reinforces tolerance," said Barbara Marcus, co-chairman of the ADL's South Shore Advisory Committee. "The participation of the various clergy in our area and the involvement of people of different faiths in preparing the Seder is the type of awareness and synergy we hope to achieve on a regular basis in our communities and throughout the world."

The Anti-Defamation League, founded in 1913, is the world's leading organization fighting anti-Semitism and other forms of bigotry through programs and services that fight hate, building bridges of understanding and safeguard liberty.

Lady drummers have the beat

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

The rhythm of the African drums drifted across Australia's Bondi Beach on Sunday mornings.

"Every Sunday, I would hear the African drummers. There is a fairly large African community in Australia. I would hear those drums, and I just loved the music. I kept saying to my husband, 'Some day I would like to play the drums. Some day I will take the class.' Then, for my birthday, he bought me a d'jembe, an African hand drum. 'Just do it,' he said."

STAFF PHOTOS/TOM GORMAN

Charisse Kanet, 16, drums alongside Irene Baird – founder of the group A Different Drum.

Irene Baird of Hull did just that.

The end result was A Different Drum, a nine-member band of lady drummers who have mastered a West African beat.

"I began drumming quite by accident. In 1995, we moved to Sydney because of my husband Larry's job. He is in finance, and a joint venture brought us to a lovely apartment right on Bondi Beach," Baird said.

Once she began her class, Baird practiced three or four hours each day. Soon her son Daniel, then a high school junior, began to drum.

"Daniel has a totally different taste in music, but when he heard me practicing, he asked to learn, also," Baird said.

When the Bairds returned to the United States in 1998, the beat went on. They now live in Hull.

"I just decided to keep on drumming," Baird said.

Baird also joined the No Place for Hate Committee. About two years ago, she was asked to perform at Diversity Day at Hull High School.

"Afterwards, two women came up and asked me to teach them to play. That is how the group got started," Baird said.

She now has nine students who play in the band on a regular basis, and several other women who join the group for performances.

"They are all just so wonderful We became an all-woman band by chance, and we discovered we like it that way. When we play the drum, there is no husband, no children, no job. There is no focus but the sound of hands on the drum. It becomes almost a meditation, a strengthening of mind and spirit," Baird said.

When they drum, they always sit in a circle.

"The circle of drums stands for unity. It doesn't matter who you are when you come to the drum. The color of your skin doesn't matter, your socio-economic level doesn't matter. It is very diverse, very nurturing," Baird said.

The polyrhythmic rhythm is structured.

"The underlying structure prevents chaos. We add our own voice," Baird said.

Drumming is a journey of self-expression.

"It's like discovering a voice inside that I never discovered before. It is a mind, body and spirit experience. It is so freeing, so empowering. This is the greatest thing I have ever done, besides being a mother," Baird said.

She still practices for hours each day and drums with a mentor.

"I still study myself, because it makes me a better teacher," Baird said.

Drumming has brought the Bairds closer as a family.

"My husband also drums with me. We play together quite often. We go on drumming retreats together in Maine and New Hampshire. After 34 years of marriage, we have this wonderful experience together. We have so much in common now. It is so wonderful when we can go away and drum together," Baird said.

At the request of the school, Baird has been conducting an after-school program for 32 third graders in Hull.

"I love being with children and teaching them. I am like the Nana with the drum. This is a wonderful thing for kindergarten-age children through grade 3. It is a really fun way to bring diversity to them," Baird said.

For this year's Diversity Day from 1-4 p.m., Monday, April 28, at Hull High School, 28 of Baird's young pupils will open the program. A Different Drum will be the closing performance.

The band will also play at the Relay for Cancer Race Saturday, May 18, in Cohasset.

"I try to do a lot of benefit concerts. Drumming is for community service," Baird said.

Last February, a Different Drum performed at the Heartbeat Coffee House at Union Congregational Church in Braintree.

"Everyone was quite surprised. We got up there, and all the girls played well. It makes me feel so happy inside. It is like a validation of my heart," Baird said. "Drumming has opened so many doors of joy for me."

A performance often begins with a song in African on the theme of respect for the universe and the community. Susan Hajjar Dagher of Hingham is lead singer. MaryAnne Hart of Hull is co-singer, who answers Dagher.

Other members of A Different Drum include Judeth VanHan, Charrise Kanet — at 16, the youngest member —Mikey Walker, Maureen Connolly, band manager, all of Hull; Laurie Sprague, Norwell; Christine Way, Quincy; Vandee Van Deusen, Newton; and Kalyani Devojyote, Watertown..

Poets Sheila Twyman and Len Germinara discuss their work at the Talking Information Center.

Sharing verse

Poetry program for blind added to radio station lineup

By Jerry Elsden
CORRESPONDENT

As a genre, poetry has blossomed on the South Shore in recent months. Attendance is up at poetry slams and bookstore readings. Local poets pour their hearts and souls out at venues such as the Cantab Lounge in Cambridge or the Daily Grind Coffeehouse in Bridgewater. Poets are evolving into performers first, pen-to-paper poets second. At poetry slams, audiences are critical, and respond accordingly. Fans of performance poets follow them from club to club.

Meanwhile, consider that nearly 20,000 blind and visually impaired people in Massachusetts tune in 24 hours a day to the Talking Information Center Network, familiarly known as the TIC, listening to volunteers read local and world news, book readings, obituaries, science reports, shopping guides, stock quotes, and much more.

Now add poetry to the TIC's program lineup.

Sheila Twyman is a published Scituate poet, writer and eight-year volunteer at the Marshfield TIC studio, which is a sub-carrier of WATD-FM.

"Last October, I proposed the idea of poetry readings on the air to Program Director Jeannie Richards because we had requests from listeners to provide more entertainment," she explains.

"We started with reading works from well-known poets such as Billy Collins, the 2002 national poet laureate," Twyman recalls. "Most contemporary poetry nowadays is free-verse, and not metered all that much."

Twyman has begun to invite poets whose works she has heard to record for the 10 p.m. Saturday slot, called "Egads! It's Poetry." "Egads!" is one of TIC's programs that Richards submitted to the International Association of Audio Information Services awards, to be announced in April.

Jack McCarthy of Lowell recently taped some of his poetry for the TIC. McCarthy, whose enthusiastic fans faithfully show up at his slams, started writing for performances 11 years ago at age 50 "because he had a lot of things to say" about divorce, old cars, 12-step programs.

Newton slam poet Simone Beaubien, who will embark on a several month national performance tour, also has read for TIC, as did Braintree's Dana Lipp, who's also a professional photographer.

Contemporary critics feel that the best poetry elicits the most feeling. Consider these lines excerpted from "Somerset," a tribute to W. Somerset Maugham and written by Len Germinara, a poetry slam performer who recently taped a half hour program with Twyman at the TIC studio.

Poet Len Germinara shares some verse on air.

It was October
It was not gray
Not yet
The world was mud-lucious
Wee... shared my favorite poem
"May I feel said he"
Made old men painting garages blush...

Germinara's writings have been influenced by poets from the 40s and 50s, such as E. E. Cummings, and beat poets Richard Brautigan and Lowell native Jack Kerouac. At this taping Germinara read in a deep, soft voice excerpts from Brautigan's "Rommell Drives Deep into Egypt" holding a rare dog-eared copy. After a short, sharp, four-liner, Germinara presses the pause button, reflects a moment, hits the reset button, and airs a few comments on the poem's meaning.

"Sometimes I feel like a hopeless shill for this stuff," Germinara later says. "But there are (poetry slam) places popping up everywhere." He smiles. "You're in the car a lot. You eat fast food and sleep fast."

He reads another, "Untitled," from his forthcoming chapbook "Everything's Jake: Dawgrrul," about his black Labrador retriever.

The furnace kicks in, rumble sound that means dollars burning.
Dust bunnies stumble swoop, almost life like.
Begin their time to clean dance.
As a dog owner I can testify that it takes just over three days to accumulate enough fallen hair needed to knit another.

He follows suit, bounces his nose on the doorframe.
Blushing, I lead him into another.
Marvel at his persistent inability to comprehend the simple task of housecleaning

Twyman and Germinara recently participated at North River Art Society's "Art Speaks", where seven performance poets interpreted art by NRAS members. "There were more than 100

Panic Room (B)

People have tried for ages to foil the bad guys by fortifying their homes — moats and battlements and the like — or tripping up intruders — some Japanese palaces had floorboards that creaked, giving warning of oncoming assassins, and electronic sensors of various sorts are legion — or constructing hidden rooms, like the "priest closets" designed to hide people of the wrong religion of the moment, or panic rooms embedded within the house to provide a safe haven.

That's where we come in, to a potentially spooky four-story brownstone in one of Manhattan's tonier districts — a rarity, a once-in-a-lifetime property, the snide realtor informs us — into which a woman and her daughter move. She is recently separated from a rich pharmaceuticals honcho who has roamed. She's saddened by their break-up, worried about her daughter, who seems tough on the outside (she also seems to be a boy for the first 10 minutes) but is likely hurting inside, and not quite sure why she needs such a cavernous mansion.

What's a movie's panic room good for if not for panic? This we get, the very first night, as robbers intrude, spookily, operating in the near-dark, as movies like this invariably do, their makers reasoning, perhaps, that what they save on illumination they can spend for publicity. The story's outline presents itself instantly to any savvy moviegoer: Heroine (Jodie Foster, up to her old trick of being a fine actress) and kid (Kristen Stewart) hurry to the panic room, the bad

Roast Pork Tenderloin

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Pork tenderloin is a relatively small, tapered cut of meat, often weighing just one pound. Since it is both small and a premium cut, it lends itself to high heat cooking which is ideal for a quick supper. The question was how to roast the tenderloin so that the exterior browns nicely while the inside remains juicy and tender.

Pork tenderloins are usually sold in pairs, each one weighing from 12 to 24 ounces. I began my testing by rubbing them with olive oil, sprinkling them with salt and pepper, and roasting them in a hot oven. At 450 degrees the tenderloin cooked to an internal temperature of 145 degrees in 38 minutes. The top of the roast was visually unappealing although the meat was tender and juicy. At 475 degrees the tenderloin cooked in just about 25 minutes and the exterior was a bit more browned. At 500 degrees the tenderloin cooked in only 20 minutes (at this temperature, the roast was easy to overcook) but the pan drippings burned and the roast, once again, was still not properly browned. A lower temperature, 350 degrees, was also unproductive.

Putting aside the oven for a moment, I decided to try sautéing the tenderloin in skillet before roasting. The bad news was that the meat shrunk too much and was also less than tender. I decided to return to the 475 degree oven, the highest temperature I could use without burning the drippings. I noted that the bottom of the roast browned nicely so I decided to turn the roast in the pan after 15 minutes. Voila! Now the exterior was deeply caramelized, had lots of flavor, and the meat was tender and juicy.

Since I often brine pork, I tested this method here as well, submersing the tenderloin in a solution of 1/2 cup kosher salt to 4 cups water. The brined roast was saltier tasting than the unbrined roast and had less pork flavor. Pork tenderloin is clearly too tender and delicate for brining. I also wondered if one pork tenderloin was enough for four people. In fact, I thought that a pound of meat was a bit skimpy but since tenderloins are sold two to a package, it was easy enough to roast two at once. I tried tying them together to create a uniform roast (tenderloins are tapered towards one end so I tied them together head to toe) but this doubled the cooking time. The easiest solution was simply to roast two tenderloins together in the same pan without tying (although the tapered end can be folded back on itself and tied so it doesn't dry out).

Now I wanted to produce a quick pan sauce so I deglazed the pan with 1/3 cup white wine and, once reduced, added 1 cup chicken stock along with 1 teaspoon chopped thyme. Once that liquid was cooked down, I whisked in a tablespoon of butter and was done. You can also use a spice rub and I have included a recipe below.

ROAST PORK TENDERLOIN

Tenderloins are usually sold two per package and two of them serve 6 adults. Do not cook the tenderloin to an internal temperature higher than 145 degrees. It will quickly dry out and become tough. (For safety, the internal temperature has to reach at least 140 degrees.)

For the pork:
1 pork tenderloin weighing about one pound, rinsed and patted dry
1 tablespoon olive oil
Salt and freshly ground pepper

For the sauce:
1/3 cup dry white wine
1 cup low sodium or homemade chicken broth
1 teaspoon chopped fresh thyme
1 tablespoon butter

1. Heat oven to 475 degrees and adjust rack to the center position. Tuck the thin end of the tenderloin under the larger part and secure with kitchen twine. Rub the tenderloin with olive oil and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Place in a small roasting pan and into the hot oven. Cook for 15 minutes. Turn the tenderloin using tongs or a meat fork and cook for an additional 15 minutes or until the internal temperature reaches 145 degrees. The time will vary slightly depending on the size of your tenderloin. Place the tenderloin on a warm plate, cover with aluminum foil and let sit for 15 minutes before slicing.

2. Place the pan over medium high heat and add the wine. Scrape any browned bits from the bottom of the pan and let the wine reduce almost completely. Add the chicken broth and the thyme and bring to a boil. Cook until syrupy and reduced by two-thirds, about 5 to 6 minutes. Taste and adjust seasoning with salt and pepper if necessary. Off heat, stir in the butter. Serve over the carved roast.

Serves 3

TWO TENDERLOIN VARIATION

If you are feeding more than three people you can easily roast a second tenderloin alongside the first. After turning the tenderloins in step one, increase the cooking time to about 20 minutes or until they have reached an internal temperature of 145 degrees.

SPICE RUB VARIATION

Omit the olive oil, salt and pepper in the above recipe. Omit the sauce. Combine the spices below and liberally apply to the tenderloin before roasting. If using two tenderloins, double the amount of the spices.

1 teaspoon ground cumin
1 1/2 teaspoons chili powder
1/4 teaspoon ground allspice
1/8 teaspoon ground cinnamon
3/4 teaspoon brown sugar
1 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
Pinch cayenne

THURSDAY, APRIL 4

Roll up your sleeves and plan to get a lot accomplished today. The moon travels in Capricorn, generating a serious mood. You can initiate new activities, particularly relating to business or your career. Zero in on duties, responsibilities you have taken on and fulfill them. The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 10:29 a.m. This moon is decreasing in light until April 12, when the new moon culminates.

FRIDAY, APRIL 5

The Capricorn moon aligns with Mars at 4:59 a.m. and becomes inactive, making this a day to finish old projects, tie up loose ends. Don't start anything new until 4:07 p.m., when the moon enters Aquarius. At this time planetary influences turn around completely, and the remainder of the day rates high for work or play. This begins an excellent period for launching major enterprises. It is also the beginning of a weekend that is ideal for new adventures, social activities, partying.

SATURDAY, APRIL 6

Above-average planetary influences continue. If you have been thinking of starting something new, like initiating a major purchase, career move or relationship, now is the day. The moon travels in Aquarius, urging you to be open to new ideas and experiences. In addition, applying alignments of the sun, Mercury, Pluto, Venus and Jupiter impact the day, making it one of the best for new beginnings. Go for the gold. Don't be a hermit tonight. Gather with friends and let the good times roll.

SUNDAY, APRIL 7

A flurry of planetary alignments affects the early morning hours. The sun and Mercury conjoin at 4:55 a.m. Mercury and the sun interact with Pluto at 6:58 a.m. and 9:12 a.m. Venus forms a harmonious 60-degree contact to Jupiter at 9:38 a.m., prompting you to kick back, relax and enjoy life. This is a wonderful day for socializing, spending quality time with friends and family. Slow down and don't take risks between 7:06-10:06 p.m., when the moon aligns with Mars.

MONDAY, APRIL 8

The Aquarius moon aligns with Uranus at 12:09 a.m. and becomes inactive. At 4:57 a.m. the moon enters Pisces, generating an easygoing mood. It may be difficult to get back to business and practical matters. Carefully organize your time and stick to your game plan, if you want to be productive. You can initiate new activities, start important projects before 8:57 p.m., when the moon forms an easy contact to expansive Jupiter.

TUESDAY, APRIL 9

This day has its challenges. Take it slow and easy. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action. The moon continues to travel in Pisces. Venus forms a 90-degree alignment to Neptune, the planetary ruler of Pisces. Imagination and creativity run high, and you can be most productive developing arts and crafts, music, poetry projects. An applying alignment of Mars and Uranus urges you to use extra caution when operating machinery. Drive defensively.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 10

A Mars/Uranus alignment may generate stormy astrological weather in the early morning hours. Allow extra time to get where you are going. There may be unexpected setbacks or distractions. Give greater attention to accuracy, details. The Pisces moon becomes inactive at 1:31 p.m., when it aligns with Mars. At 5:40 p.m. the moon enters Aries, and the final windup to this month's new moon begins.

Green thumbs up

Soil basics

As darkness fell on a pleasant springtime evening, I reluctantly gathered my tools and retreated from the peaceful solitude of my awakening gardens. The plaintive call of a mourning dove echoed on the still night air as if to share in my sorrow. Despite hours of raking and clipping, so much remains to be done. Welcome rainfall and moderate temperatures have brought the gardens to life creating a sense of urgency to uncover my emerging treasures and complete the garden cleanup but care must be taken not to crush tender foliage or accidentally pull up superficially rooted plants that may have heaved in recent weeks.

Earlier in the day, a pair of resident green frogs crawled out of the water garden to bask in the afternoon sun as a plump gray squirrel refreshed itself from the water's edge. A lethargic toad was upturned in the leaf litter as I raked a dense covering of debris from a shady perennial border. A little pile of damp leaves remains to provide him shelter until the temperatures warm sufficiently for him to seek a new secure spot in the garden.

Pretty primroses in shades of lavender and deep rose pink have burst into bloom joining the elegant mauve, purple and white blooms of the hellebores. The distinctive speckled leaves of lungworts (Pulmonaria spp.) have emerged with their clusters of pink and blue bell-shaped flowers just beginning to appear. A diversity of minor bulbs in pink, blue and white dot the borders and dozens of plump buds on clumps of daffodils promise glorious blooms in the day to come.

Despite our recent precipitation, low water levels are sure to have a major impact on this year's growing season. Many communities have already instituted water restrictions and unless Mother Nature produces a remarkably wet spring, our trees and shrubs, lawns and gardens may struggle to survive if we are unable to provide supplemental moisture. Proper soil preparation is critical to the survival of plants at all times but it becomes especially important during periods of extreme dampness or drought.

Soil is comprised of inorganic (mineral) components and organic (plant and animal) components. Heavy, clay soils are dense due to tiny clay particles that cling together and drain slowly, which may prevent air from reaching plant roots. This, in turn, may lead to rot during periods of dampness or during the winter months when plants are not actively growing and thereby unable to diffuse excess moisture through their leaves. Dry, sandy soils tend to contain large particles that drain rapidly demanding constant irrigation during dry spells. In addition, nutrients are quickly swept away each time plants are watered. Organic matter (decomposed plant and animal matter) gives soil its dark color and improves the texture of all soil types. The presence of organic matter provides beneficial microorganisms that convert nutrients in the organic matter to inorganic nutrients that the plant can use.

The addition of organic matter to clay soils improves drainage and airflow, which also allows the soil to warm up more rapidly in spring. When incorporated into dry, sandy soils, organic materials improve water and nutrient retention. Organic material can be added in the form of well-decomposed manure, compost, peat moss or shredded leaves.

The importance of adding organic matter to the soil cannot be overemphasized as well as the need to replenish humus through the years. Over time, even soils rich in humus initially become depleted and new sources of organic material must be worked into the soil.

To determine the mineral content of your soil, fill two-thirds of a large jar with water, add soil until almost full, shake vigorously and allow to settle for several hours. The largest, heaviest particles are sand and these quickly sink to the bottom of the jar. Silt and clay (the latter containing the smallest particles that will constitute the uppermost layer in the jar) take hours or days to settle. The ideal garden soil is called loam with 40 percent sand, 40 percent silt and 20 percent clay.

people in the audience, all very attentive. It was like being in a church," she says of the GAR Hall in Marshfield Hills Village. Twyman credits NRAS co-entertainment chairman Linda Borrer for helping to organize the event.

When she first started recording at the TIC Twyman wore the traditional headphones, taped, listened, and taped again.

"I became very conscious about slowing down the pace of my voice," she recalls. Recently the TIC installed new technology so that a reader now can check the timbre and quality of his or her voice on a monitor while speaking into the microphone.

Hundreds of volunteers at several TIC locations statewide contribute their time on air, or provide office support and other duties. The Marshfield TIC station was part of founder Ed Perry's plan in 1978 when he started WATD-FM.

Blind and visually-impaired listeners can access the TIC via special receivers at a cost of $100, although no one who is eligible is turned away, through the use of sponsors. The TIC is also available through certain radio stations throughout the state.

Call the TIC offices at 1-800-696-9505 for details, or if you would like to become a volunteer.

Jodie Foster tries not to panic.

Excitement in the dark guys make repeated efforts to get them to come out — one works for a security company and designed the panic room and knows it can't be broken into — bad things happen, folks are hurt and a miserable time is had by all, though at the end we leave singing a happy tune, sorta.

What sets this apart is its tone of ongoing danger, its adroit photography (you want a tracking shot for the books? Voila!), its clever use of the mansion as an additional character and the distinct personalities of the robbers. Dwight Yoakum plays the cold as ice guy, rational, it seems, for a while. Jared Leto plays an excitable, obsessed family member of the deceased house owner who secreted a fortune in you get one guess which room. Forest Whitaker plays the security expert who eschews violence and — this is Hollywood and he's black — is a nice crook who does the right thing in due course. The few minor roles are cleverly handled. Some plot turns are by-the-book (the girl needs medication; the thieves fall out, as in film and life they tend to; the ladies are as shrewd as the robbers) while some will surprise you. A neat balance between moments for strategizing and others of fury provide a con trapuntal tempo.

Great movies with houses encompassing evil ("Psycho" and "The Exorcist" among them) mediocre movies with bad houses ("Amityville Horror" comes into mind), and many with houses that just need script fumigation or more light bulbs (there I go again), are if not quite a genre then certainly a cinema sub-category. "Panic Room" is good, not great, but greatly pleases any who want chills and to see first-rate performers like Foster and Whitaker show how they do it.

Train build pact inked

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

As it stands now, South Shore commuters can expect to ride the Greenbush train to work by the late 2005, according to the state transportation office.

Plans to build the controversial 17-mile third leg of the Old Colony Railroad restoration project revved up last week with the awarding of the $252 million construction contract to a joint venture consisting of Cashman Construction of Boston and Balfour Beatty, an international company.

"The design can really go forward in earnest now."
— Jon Carlisle, transportation office spokesman

Transportation office spokesman Jon Carlisle said the entire project is expected to cost from $430-$440 million, including right-of-way takings, permitting, police details, trains and double-decker coaches.

The construction includes an underpass at Weymouth Landing and a tunnel under Hingham Square.

He explained the construction phase of the contract will come in on budget unless the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority changes the scope of the project.

"We are using an innovative contract called the design-build method," Carlisle said. He explained the contractor assumes any cost overruns unless the MBTA directs a change.

The design-build method can help expedite a project because con-

Noel Ripley makes some repairs to the town clock in the steeple of First Parish Church. Ripley will speak tonight on the history of timepieces at 7:30 p.m. at the Lightkeepers Residence.

Repaired town clock in steeple

With bells ringing, cuckoos sounding and clocks ticking, Noel Ripley sits perched above the controlled mayhem in his office. The cacophony is enough to drive one crazy.

"I don't even hear it anymore," he said. "I used to be able to concentrate on each one and pick out its sound, but now I just block it out."

"Time is so important, it governs everything."
— Noel Ripley

Riley has been making sure Cohasset is on time for more than 25 years. Owner of Cohasset Clock Smith, he repairs all types of clocks ranging from wrist and pocket watches to grandfather and cuckoo clocks.

Ripley will share his knowledge of timepieces tonight (Thursday, April 11) at 7:30 p.m. at the Lightkeepers' Residence, in the first of a spring lecture series sponsored by the Cohasset Historical Society. Ripley, the keeper of the town clock, will present "A History of Timekeeping" starting with sundials.

The South Main Street resident, who estimates he has repaired almost 10,000 clocks in his time, said he started his business as a way to combine his love for working on machines with his desire to be self-employed.

"Clocks are just fascinating," Ripley said. "Time is so important, it governs everything."

While he enjoys working on timepieces of all sizes, Ripley's eyes sparkle when he describes his work on the town clock. Twenty-five years ago Ripley, with the help of Fran Collins, took the broken clock apart and rebuilt it at the South Shore Regional Vocational Technical High School in

Hill gives incumbents a scare

The polls are closed and the results are in. In what was perceived to be a slow year for the town election, with only one race on the ballot, turned into a real nail-biter.

The three selectmen candidates, who were vying for two seats on the board, finished the day separated by only a shade more than 100 votes. The two incumbents, Fred Koed and Ronnie McMorris, edged newcomer Roger Hill in a race that many thought wouldn't have been so close.

"I think the town made a statement," Hill said. "It sends a message to the selectmen that a lot of people are upset with the way they run the town."

Hill, who has no previous political experience, felt although he made some mistakes while running his campaign, the overall

Katie had a bright future

Aunt delivers message to drunk drivers

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Katie DeCubellis should be thinking about what dress to pick out for the junior prom. She should have finished taking her SATs and visited various colleges to get a feel for which one she wanted to attend.

"It's a mother's worst fear to have two officers knock on your door and tell you there's been an accident. Katie just never came home."
— Laurie Liddell, 467 Beechwood St.

She would be a very pretty girl now, the braces she wore as a 13-year-old turning her mouth into a perfect smile. She should be out with friends, learning how to laugh and live and not worrying about the "real world." However, Katie isn't doing any of that.

Katie DeCubellis was killed by a drunk driver in 1999.

Katie was struck down by a drunk driver in October 1999, ending her dreams and aspirations and forever changing the people she knew.

Katie's aunt, Laurie Liddell was one of those profoundly affected by the tragedy. Liddell, 467 Beechwood St., was so stricken by the loss of her niece that she offered her services to Mother's Against Drunk Driving, an organization dedicated to stopping drunk driving and underage drinking.

She currently speaks to first time drunk-driving offenders in Hingham, Norwood and Quincy and has been for more than a year. MADD recently recognized Liddell as its volunteer of the year. However, that is no consolation for the loss of Katie.

"There's no gratification in it," she said. "I usually dread going and speaking, it's so difficult."

When Liddell speaks it's easy to tell why she's so effective in communicating the horrors of drunk driving. A fourth-grade teacher in Weymouth, she speaks softly and comfortably, but with an authorita-

Water improvements in the works

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

One of the biggest and most important expenditures at Town Meeting generated the smallest debate last week. While discussion lasted for hours on the appropriation of money for such articles as legal action to stop a proposed runway, $30,000; two new ball fields, $100,000; and a preliminary engineering study to install sewers to Little Harbor, $180,000 — the passage of an article appropriating $2 million for water system improvements went largely unnoticed.

The money will be used for improvements to the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant, cleaning and lining of water pipes, capital maintenance and other improvements to wells, storage tanks and the water distribution system. The money will also go to protect the sources of public drinking water supply.

In an information sheet provided to voters at Town Meeting, the Water Commission stated, "the purpose of this article is to improve fire flows in a number of areas throughout the town.

"It also allows certain plant improvements and continues our watershed protection activities, pursuant to our long-range plans for the water distribution system, water treatment plant and watershed protection."

The appropriation of the money has no effect on water rates and the borrowing for the article is going to be repaid only from water revenue., the commission stated.

The Water Commission withdrew other articles from the Town Meeting warrant that concerned the potential sale of water to Hingham Mass-American because the company is being sold. McNabb said the Water Commission will likely be bringing the articles back to another town meeting. He said negotiations with Mass-American are going well.

Mass-American which serves Hingham, Hull and about 320 homes in North Cohasset, is exploring buying 500,000 gallons of water a day from Cohasset. The sale would need the approval of Town Meeting.

This week in COHASSET

Brush accepted

Residential brush will be accepted at the DPW parking area until April 28. No trees over 12-ins. in diameter. No contractors.

Meeting schedule

Cohasset Conservation Commission, April 11, 7:30 p.m.
Library Building Committee, April 17, 9:30 a.m.
Planning Board, April 17, 7:30 p.m.
Committee on Town History, April 22, 7:30 p.m.
Zoning Board of Appeals, April 22, 7:30 p.m.
All meetings are at Town Hall unless otherwise noted.

Board reorganizes

In their first meeting after annual Town Election, the selectmen regrouped and welcomed back incumbents Fred Koed and Ronnie McMorris. The board also voted on a new chairman and vice-chairman with Michael Sullivan being named the chairman and McMorris the vice-chairman.

Although he served as chairman several years ago, Sullivan was obviously unaccustomed to his new role as the leader of the meeting as he needed to be reminded on several occasions to call a question to be voted on.

"It's going to be a long couple of meetings," Selectman Tom Callahan joked.

Position filled

Garry Gardner, 90 Beechwood St., informed selectmen that he will be resigning as a member of the Common Historic District Commission. Janice Crowley, 392 Jerusalem Road, was appointed to the board Tuesday night. She is a licensed realtor.

Dates approved

Selectmen approved their meeting schedule which will take them through the summer Tuesday. The dates they will be meeting are:
Tuesday, April 23
Tuesday, May 7
Tuesday, May 21
Tuesday, June 4
Tuesday, June 18
Tuesday, July 9
Tuesday, July 23
Tuesday, August 6
Tuesday, August 20
Tuesday, Sept. 10

Name change

Lou Russo, manager of governmental relations of AT&T, informed selectmen that her company will be changing names. She came before the board to ask them to consider changing the town's cable and phone service from AT&T Corporation to AT&T Comcast Corporation.

Russo explained AT&T is merging with the Comcast Corporation thus creating the new company.

The board agreed after making sure this will not affect customers.

"This will have no bearing on the service customers see or the rates they pay," Russo said. "There will be no apparent difference."

Russo said the change will probably go into effect by the end of the year.

Logan lawsuit on fast track

Opponents of a new runway at Logan Airport say they scored a victory last week when a Plymouth Superior Court judge denied Massport's attempt to dismiss the case, and instead put it on the fast track to trial.

In an April 2 ruling, Justice Charles J. Hely upheld claims made in a suit filed against Massport by the Town of Hull and set a conference date with counsel of April 11. Hull is the lead community in a coalition of municipalities on the South Shore that oppose the construction of Runway 14/32 at Boston's Logan International Airport.

Hely agreed that the suit could go forward on the basis that communities surrounding the airport can hold Massport accountable for the pollution and noise nuisance resulting from Logan over-flights, that the agency's environmental filings may be challenged, and that the expansion project's approval by state Secretary of Environmental Affairs Robert Durand was subject to further review.

"This is a major setback for Massport," said attorney William B. Golden of the law firm of Baker, Braverman and Barbadoro, P.C. of Braintree. "We are eager to get to trial. We are confident that we can now stop the runway and require Massport to reduce the current impacts of noise and pollution on neighborhoods and communities south of Boston."

Golden, who is special counsel to the coalition of communities fighting the expansion of the airport, appeared before Hely to argue the case on March 13. He said the judge's decision to go to trial will subject Massport to unprecedented scrutiny.

"This kind of review is something that Massport has never faced before," Golden said.

But Massport spokeswoman Barbara Platt said the agency is not upset by the judge's ruling.

"This has been part of a 10-year process to improve Logan Airport," she said. "As the case proceeds, we look forward to legal review of the facts and we're grateful that two of the claims were dismissed."

She explained the judge dismissed claims of fraud by Massport and a request that the runway just not be built.

Platt also explained the proposed runway addresses a specific wind-related delay and that has not been impacted by the events of Sept. 11 that resulted in a reduction of air traffic nationwide.

Municipal officials and activists opposing the expansion of the airport were encouraged by the judge's ruling.

"We are eager to get to trial."

— William B. Golden, attorney for runway opponents

"This absolutely vindicates what we've been saying all along," said Hull Town Manager Philip E. Lemnios. "Massport has been playing fast and loose with the facts and has lost sight of its mission, which is to serve the needs of all of the citizens of Massachusetts."

According to the suit, opponents are seeking a ruling from the court that "Massport's negligent operation of Logan International Airport constitutes a public nuisance, and that the implementation of the Logan Airside Improvements Project [Runway 14/32] will result in an unnecessary and unreasonable exacerbation of a continuing and repeated public nuisance."

The court is being asked to compel Massport "to assist the Town of Hull in mitigating existing noise and other adverse impacts of current operations" of the airport, including working "in good faith" with the town to redirect flights over Massachusetts Bay.

"This is an historic breakthrough," said Eric Oddleifson of Cohasset, a member of the South Shore Jet Pollution Council. "In addition to being opposed to expansion of the airport, we've shifted the argument to what's happening to us now with health issues and property devaluation from being directly under Logan's flight path.

"There were a lot of skeptics of this approach of getting this into the courts," Oddleifson said. "Now we have the tools to force Massport to change their policy."

But Cohasset Selectman Tom Callahan is still not convinced that this legal action is the right route.

He explained the complaint survived a motion to dismiss and will go to jury trial, but he stopped short of calling it a victory.

"Accusing Massport of fraud and being nearly criminal is not a good way to do what you want," he said.

Callahan said he is not "for the runway," but feels the town shouldn't spend its limited resources on a fight that will be ultimately won or lost with the FAA in Washington, D.C. He also said he doesn't buy the argument that more air traffic overhead will decrease property values.

"We live within 10 miles of an airport in the 21st century – we have to take a certain amount of air traffic," he said.

Cohasset voters appropriated $30,000 for the runway lawsuit at the annual Town Meeting in March.

Editor Mary Ford contributed to this report which was provided by runway opponents.

Jury convicts former coach

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

A former Cohasset High School coach and special education teacher was expected to be sentenced yesterday after the Mariner went to press on charges he sexually assaulted a boy at a basketball camp in New Hampshire 18 months ago.

Lowell Mark Hall, 34, who pleaded not guilty to the charges, collapsed on the floor of the Merrimack County courtroom after the jury delivered its verdict last Thursday evening.

Although several published reports stated Hall had apparently taken poison, one of the county attorneys prosecuting the case, said he has no knowledge of that.

"I can't tell you what he may or may not have taken," Assistant Merrimack Attorney Brian Lavalle said. "But shortly after the jury foreman announced the verdict Mr. Hall became ill and appeared to have some sort of seizure."

Lavalle said the EMTs were called and took Hall to the hospital. He was then airlifted to a UMass Memorial Medical Center in Worcester where he was treated and released, according to the spokesman for patient information at the hospital. Lavalle said the judge set bail at $25,000 cash, so Hall would be under bail obligation to return for sentencing.

Hall's attorney Mark Sisti said he would not comment on his client's medical condition. Sisti said Hall will appeal the conviction to the New Hampshire Supreme Court.

"There's no question he'll appeal," he said.

Hall, who had worked for Cohasset High School's athletic program as junior varsity basketball coach and strength and conditioning coach for the football team, also served as a part-time special education aide and substitute math teacher.

When the charges surfaced in July 2001, Cohasset school officials and students expressed surprise at the news. Hall, who had worked for the school system for some time, was described as being well liked and a positive influence.

Then Cohasset Det. Rick Grassie, who is now police prosecutor, said he met with school officials and talked to the Norfolk County District Attorney's Office last summer about the charges.

"We were gearing up just in case people came forward," Grassie said.

But Cohasset police have received no complaints about Hall.

"No student has come forward to the Cohasset Police Department with any issue involving Lowell Mark Hall," he said. "As of now, no one said Hall did or said anything that made anyone feel uncomfortable."

Cohasset Superintendent of Schools Edward Malvey said he and Cohasset Middle High School Principal Michael Jones spoke with Hall when "this all broke" last summer and told him he would not be offered a position in Cohasset.

"Although people are innocent until proved guilty, given the seriousness of the matter we decided not to have Hall return and did not offer him a position," he said. Malvey said Hall would not be employed by the school system again.

"We will have no further relationship with Mark Hall," he said.

Malvey said although there were "fortunately no incidents in Cohasset," he was concerned for the victims.

According to Lavalle, Hall was initially charged with five misdemeanors, which are each punishable by up to a year in prison. A single charge of simple assault against a second alleged victim was dismissed for legal reasons, he said..

The jury deliberated on the remaining four charges and found Hall guilty on two charges of sexual assault and one charge of simple assault.

Lavalle said Hall touched the victim's genitals, his buttocks and his thigh.

The incident occurred on the first night at the "Satch" Sanders Basketball Camp held on the campus of New England College in Henniker, N.H. where Hall was working as a coach.

At the time, Henniker police said Hall went into the campers' room and a few minutes later he touched one of the boys in the groin and buttocks and wrapped his arms around the other boy from behind, picked him up and shook him as if he was "trying to crack his back."

The boys, who were both under 16 and Massachusetts residents, reported the incident to a counselor on the floor.

Greenbush construction pact inked struction can go forward as the design unfolds in another area. So far, 15 percent of the design is complete on Greenbush. He said the MBTA is anxious to get Greenbush rolling; its sister lines to Plymouth and Middleboro have been in operation since September 1997.

"The design can really go forward in earnest now," Carlisle said.

Resolving local conservation permitting issues is expected to take about a year and ground should be broken on Greenbush next spring, he said.

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, who has been a staunch opponent to the project because of the cost and environmental impacts, thinks Greenbush will end up costing more than estimates.

"When there is only minimal design, you're going to run into a lot of issues, that will only bring the cost up," he said.

The MBTA, which says the project fits in its capital plan, must live on a fixed budget that includes debt service and current operating costs. The budget is defined by revenue including one-fifth of the sales tax, local assessments and the fare box. Hedlund expects the agency to be back before the Legislature asking for more money.

But Hedlund hopes he's mistaken.

"I'd love to be the person who goes out a few years down the road and says, 'I was wrong.'"

In the meantime, Hedlund's office is fielding complaints from abutters unhappy with mitigation that was offered. And others have called because they not happy with the compensation they received from the MBTA that took their land by eminent domain.

"I suggested they call a lawyer, there's a limit to what I can do in some cases," he said.

David Clinton of the former group Back-on-Track, which pushed for the train, described the fear of cost overruns as "scare tactics" and not based on experience.

"I believe the other two lines – Plymouth and Middleboro – came in within their budget, so I don't see how they can claim that," he said.

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

PRAYERS, SUPPORT

Hello Cohasset. I wanted to start this week by sending out warm and heartfelt wishes to all of those who are ill, battling any type of condition or trying to help and support those who are in need. A very dear friend of our family is dealing with a recurrence of cancer and it is just so amazing to see how many people are dealing with some form of illness on a day-to-day basis. The support and well-wishes are so important and the desire to help when needed is huge, unfortunately, sometimes there doesn't seem to be anything that can be done except to send prayers and support. All of the walks, runs and fundraisers that are so big in the spring for all types of illnesses are another way to show support and help in the fight to find cures and answers.

NEW ADDITIONS

Here is some wonderful news from a family that has been doubly blessed in the last few months. Jim and Nancy Sandell and June Fahey, all of Cohasset, are very proud grandparents indeed. Matthew and Anna Sandell Smith of Cohasset are proud parents of Benjamin Hamilton Smith, who was born on Jan. 17. Mason and Jacquelyn Fahey Sandell, currently living in Rome, Italy are the very proud parents of Maia Grace Sandell who was born on April 2. Congratulations to everyone on these beautiful new additions to the families!

LOCAL AUTHOR

A former Cohasset resident, Dana Prescott, just had a book published by Random House/Fodor's titled "Around Rome With Kids." Dana has lived in Rome for the past 17 years with her husband and teenaged son. Dana dedicates the book to many people, including retired CHS teacher and principal, Curt Collins, whom she credits with encouraging and teaching her to write. Dana graduated from CHS with the class of 1970. If you are planning a visit to Rome, with or without kids, this is a great guide to have. It is available at Buttonwood Books. Dana's sister, Joan Busk, is so proud of this accomplishment of her sister.

ON STAGE

The children of The Academy of The Company Theatre in Norwell will present the fairy tale classic, Cinderella; April 26 at 7:30 p.m., April 27 at 7:30 p.m., and April 28 at 2 p.m. The fabulous songs of Rodgers & Hammerstein will highlight this classic childhood fable, as will the colorful costumes and storybook sets. Among the talented performers in the cast, Sally Meehan of Cohasset plays Cinderella, Jessica Dupre of Cohasset plays the Fairy Godmother, and Zach Crossen of Hingham, will portray the handsome prince who rescues Cinderella from a very miserable life. A cast of more than 30 children will take on the added roles of the evil step-sisters, palace personnel, assorted woodland creatures, and so forth. Tickets for this family show are priced at just $10 in advance and $12 the day of the performance. BASEBALL SEASON OPENER

Take me out to the ball game, take me out to the crowd... Cohasset High School's Baseball Team won itsopening game of the season in Millis on Saturday. What an exciting game it was! While fans sat on the edge of the bleachers, Ted Straughn, debuting in his first varsity baseball game, hit a two run home run! His older brother, Tim threw five innings of three hit shut-out baseball. Team members, Matt O'Brien, Trey Curry, Mike Snowdale, John Downing, Mike Dooley, Chris McKenna, Robin Murphy, Louis Blanco, Dave Krueger and Pat Reardon contributed to superb batting and fielding in this high scoring game.(10-3) Mark your calendars for home games on April 24 at 4 and April 25 at 3:30 p.m. at Miliken Field! You guys are awesome, keep up the great work!

THAYER HONORS

Hats off to the five Cohasset students named to the Thayer Academy Upper School honor roll. Finishing the term with honors are: Christina Daniels, a freshman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard J. Daniels; Malcolm J. Stansell, a sophomore, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Stansell, Jr.; Michael Thomas Ernst, a sophomore, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Ernst and Suzanne Marie Lewis, a freshman, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Lewis.

TRIP TO GERMANY

Students at Gould Academy in Bethel, Maine recently took part in the schools Four Point Program, spending a week pursuing an intensive experiential educational opportunity outside the classroom. The freshman class, including Douglas Pearce, son of Peter and Ansley Pearce of Cohasset, together with faculty chaperones, traveled to Droyssig, Germany to experience the history and culture of a foreign country. Calling all canes? That's right, a collapsible cane has been lost somewhere in town and we need to do all that we can to find it! The cane is copper colored with a black handle and if anyone reading out there has any clues, please call Katherine Stanton at 781-383-0944.

FIRST VACATION

I want to wish everyone who is getting ready to enjoy April vacation with their families a wonderful and relaxing week. As much as I am looking forward to my week with the kids, I am also a little bit nervous as my oldest son Daniel is taking his first vacation with my mom to California without me! I know that they are going to have a phenomenal time but I am already counting the days until he is home again and he hasn't even left yet. You can be rest assured that I will make sure to be very busy with other two children while he is gone to pass the time a little quicker. These are normal feelings, aren't they?

Walking to fight multiple sclerosis

On April 20, hundreds of people from Cohasset and beyond will walk the streets to find a cure for multiple sclerosis. The event is part of a nationwide fund raising tradition, The MS Walk®, presented by Serono. The Cohasset Walk takes off from the South Shore Community Center at 10a.m., and follows a six-mile path. Nationally, more than 200,000 walkers at more than 700 sites are expected to raise over $30 million. Organized in Massachusetts and New Hampshire by the Central New England Chapter since 1989, The MS Walk is the National MS Society's premiere fund raising event. Each walker is encouraged to raise $100, but most collect over $200. Individuals and groups, and corporate and family teams can register by calling 1-800-493-WALK (9255), online at www.msnewengland.org, and in-person the day-of.

Volunteers also make The MS Walk a success; interested persons should call the Chapter office.

The Green Team, led by Barbara Green of Cohasset, has the third highest fund raising total, nearly $21,000, of the entire Central New England Chapter. Of the many corporate sponsors that make The MS Walk possible each year, Serono, ProCon Construction, Woodard & Curran, Atlantica Restaurant, Edward Jones Financial, and Community Newspaper Company count among the most loyal and generous.

MS is a chronic, auto-immune disease that affects the central nervous system, causing unpredictable symptoms ranging from numbness to total paralysis to blindness. Most commonly diagnosed between ages 20 and 50, MS affects women two to three times more often than men.

John Flanagan of Edward Jones Investments, left, has his walking shoes ready for the 2002 MS walk, set for April 20 at the South Shore Community Center. With him are Kim White, development manager of the National MS Society, Woody Chittick, MS board of directors, Dan Rattner, MS ambassador, and Karen Hurd of Edward Jones Investments, which hosted a kick-off breakfast at the Atlantica with area business leaders.

Alzheimer's support group hosts brunch

"A Taste of Spring: A Wine-Tasting Brunch," the 12th annual fund-raising event for the Alzheimer's disease Support Group of the South Shore, Inc., (ADSGSS) will take place at Saporito's Florence Club Café in Hull on Sunday, April 28 at 1 p.m. The event includes a five-course gourmet menu. Each course is accompanied by a wine selected by Mark Lewis of M.S. Walker Co. who will explain the fine art of blending foods and wines.

Again, Andy and Mary Ann Saporito Boothroyd have selected from their culinary favorites to present an exiting menu. Lucky winners will be chosen for the baskets of gourmet foods and wines. The Joe Micarelli trio will provide a jazz accompaniment to the food and wine.

ADSGSS, Inc. is a non-profit, educational corporation that depends solely on public donations.

Reservations must be made in advance by calling JoAnn Mitchell at 781-749-5417, evenings. Tables may be arranged for four, five, eight or 10 at $65 per person.

Friendship helps her focus on mission: fighting cancer

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

There's a small sign outside a home on Old Coach Road which implores people to participate in the American Cancer Society's Relay for Life. However, the little proclamation doesn't indicate how large the support is for the cause inside the residence.

Laurie Greenip is in the midst of her second year of participation with the Cohasset Relay For Life.. A young, vivacious woman, Greenip became involved after learning one of her closest friends, Lee Anne DeVries, was diagnosed with breast cancer.

— RELAY FOR LIFE —

"It was devastating to think someone your age can get cancer," she said. "It was a real wake up call."

Realizing she wanted to something "very special" to help her friend, Greenip started to explore various avenues. That's when she discovered the Relay for Life.

The Relay started 15 years ago with Dr. Gordon Klatt walking around a track in Tacoma, Washington to raise money for cancer research. Last year, more than two million people participated in 2,700 events across the country and raised $168 million. In the Cohasset relay, more than $100,000 was raised.

The American Cancer Society, which now sponsors the event, is a community based, volunteer driven organization. According to Kate Langstone, regional executive for communications for the ACS, said the organization could not possibly accomplish its mission to eliminate cancer and improve the quality of life of cancer patients without the work of its dedicated volunteers.

"It was devastating to think someone your age can get cancer."
— Laurie Greenip, relay volunteer

The relay invites participants to walk around a track all night in support of cancer research. Participants will experience the Taste of the Relay in which local restaurants prepare their best offerings, the Survivor's Lap and the luminaria display, which remembers those who have lost the fight to cancer and honors those who have survived

"The entire event is very positive," Greenip said.

Although DeVries was raised in Cohasset along with Greenip, she never knew what the relay was all about until Greenip became involved. She also hopes to reach out to those in the community who still don't know about the relay.

"The first reason I'm involved is to raise money for a cure," DeVries said. "But I really want to try and evoke a sense of excitement about this event in town."

DeVries, who didn't know Greenip was busy creating a team in her honor called "Lee Anne's Team," was moved by her friend's good intentions.

"I was really touched," she said. "Not only with Laurie (Greenip) but with the total amount of people that attended the event."

This year Greenip is leading the team along with DeVries and Deb Kuppens, also a cancer survivor, which already has 75 people participating. However, Greenip is also taking on additional responsibility. She's working on the planning committee registering teams and collecting money. Greenip will be stationed in a tent the day of the relay to collect any last minute monies teams have raised.

"I wanted to be more involved this year," she said. "This is just a way to show my support."

DeVries also has added responsibility and is working on the Survivor's Reception which involves recruiting local survivors for the survivor's lap and reception, and welcoming them to the event.

Laurie Greenip of Cohasset is working on the planning committee registering teams and collecting money for the Relay for Life. She's also helping to lead a team in honor of a friend, who has breast cancer.

Last year Greenip's team, which was comprised of 48 people who were all friends or family of DeVries, generated more than $15,000 for cancer research — the most by any team in the relay. She received a trophy for her team raising the most amount of money but Greenip said it was not about personal achievements. She said she hopes to double the amount this year.

"I just wanted to do something significant," she said. "You don't do it to win you do it because you care."

The event starts at 3 p.m., Friday, May 17 at Cohasset High School. The opening ceremony and survivors' lap is at 6pm. Any local cancer survivor is invited to participate regardless of whether or not they are on a team.

The luminaria ceremony is at 9 p.m., Friday. Anyone can purchase a luminaria candle prior to or at the Relay for a minimum contribution of $5. The closing ceremony is at noon, Saturday, May 18.

Local residents are encouraged to come to the relay and enjoy the ceremonies regardless of whether they are on a team. For more information call 1-888-648-4880.

Sobering statistics

According to the Associated Press, a recent study revealed about 1,400 college students are killed every year in alcohol-related incidents.

The research also found there are all sorts of other unsavory consequences of alcohol abuse among young adults that don't result in death, such as hundreds of thousands of injuries, and incidents of sexual assault and date rape. Thousands also report having unprotected sex after drinking.

Therefore as the school year winds down for many high school seniors, parents should start to wonder if this is what their child can look forward to next year in college.

Proms and graduation parties are also right around the corner.

So this is a good time for all of us to take a step back and rethink our feelings about teens and alcohol.

Some well-meaning, but misguided adults may still believe the best way to avoid a college disaster is to provide a boot camp for drinking for their children and sometimes other people's kids. They believe teens are going to drink no matter what, so they might as well learn how to handle it.

This foolish approach gives minors a green light to drink and formed the basis for the Social Host Responsibility Law that holds adults liable for knowingly allowing a minor to drink. Under the law, the adult doesn't have to physically hand a teenager a beer to be held responsible.

A recent study by Boston University's School of Public Health found that the younger people are when they start drinking alcohol, the more likely they are to drive after excessive drinking and be involved in alcohol-related crashes in the adult lives.

Here are some other alarming statistics provided by Mothers Against Drunk Driving:

- Eight young Americans die everyday in alcohol-related traffic accidents
- Underage drinking costs Massachusetts $934 million annually
- Underage drinking costs the United State more than $53 billion every year — enough to buy every public school student a new computer
- More 10th-graders will get drunk this year than will go on to graduate from college.

We think it's time to put the same emphasis on the health-related effects of alcohol that is on the dangers of smoking. There has to be a public outcry over the huge waste resulting from underage drinking. Kids have to be convinced it's cool to be a teetotaler.

We worry our children will get into drugs — yet alcohol kills 6-1/2 times more young people than all other illicit drugs combined, according to MADD.

But some students, like Cohasset's Martha Henderson, who is a junior at Notre Dame Academy, are trying to make a difference. Martha was selected as one of 80 delegates to attend a Youth Summit to Prevent Underage Drinking sponsored by MADD next month.

The event provides a forum for high school students from across the state to work on ways to stop underage drinking.

"I think it's very important for teenagers to hear the message from other teenagers with whom they can relate and share common experiences," Martha said.

Barbara Harrington, state executive director of MADD, said young people like Martha not only serve as role models but as model citizens.

"The fact alcohol-related traffic deaths are on the rise for the first time in two decades should concern us all," she said. "It's not enough to get mad, we need people to get involved."

Clearly, Martha and other young people like her can't do it alone.

It's time for grownups to put some parental pressure on their kids. Let them know you won't stand for any drinking. It's just not worth the potential heartache.

Common workshop is April 24

The Cohasset Common Historic District Commission is sponsoring a community workshop on Tuesday, April 24 at 7:30 p.m. in the Town Hall Auditorium, 41 Highland Ave. The Historic District Commission is seeking comments and ideas from members of the community to assist in the development of a landscape preservation plan to preserve the natural integrity and historical landscape of the Common environment.

Representatives from the design firm Carr, Lynch, / Denig, Hermann and Sandell, Inc. will present initial design ideas to preserve the common landscape as it adapts to a changing external environment. Items for discussion will include current parking congestion around the common edges, putting all overhead wires underground, tree planting and green-space maintenance, condition of existing walkways and the installation of new lighting. For further information please call the Board of Selectmen's office at (781) 383-4105.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Thanks for support

TO THE EDITOR:

I want to thank everyone who supported me last Saturday in the town election. I look forward to working for our community these next three years.

I am grateful to the Mariner and the local press for providing the candidates with the opportunity to discuss the issues in a comprehensive way. It has only been six years since I first sought election to the Board of Selectmen, but the election process has changed so much in that time.

Six years ago there were forums and candidate's debates, live coverage election night on the cable channel and even a unity breakfast the following week. It was hectic for the candidates, but one knew that the democratic process was thriving on the local level.

Sadly, only the Council on Elder Affairs and the Beechwood Church continue the tradition and with only one contested race, the local access channel didn't even run the results. While I understand that volunteers in every organization are busy, I hope that next April some of that old time election spirit can be rejuvenated. Maybe even one or two of our local experts can be coaxed out of retirement to host an event.

Thank you again for the opportunity to serve as your Selectmen.

TO MARK HADDAD:
TOWN MANAGER

I would like to introduce myself. My name is Keith Williams and my wife, Christine, and I have recently moved into a house at 74 Pond St. This is our first home and we believe we could not have chosen a better town to set roots and begin to raise a family. We look forward to many years of happiness in Cohasset.

I write to you to express my thanks and appreciation for all the help they guys at the transfer station have provided over the last month. From the first day my wife and I brought rubbish left over from the old owners to the transfer station, Larry has been a huge help directing us and showing us the ropes around the transfer station. As the boxes emptied and the piles of cardboard grew, we were dismayed at the prospect of dragging it all to be recycled. No worries though. Both Charlie and Chuck have been extremely helpful when I arrived each week with another large load of boxes. Their assistance with each load, whether it was boxes or another trip with rubbish has been welcomed and appreciated.

Please acknowledge my thanks for all the help and assistance that the guys at the transfer station have shown my wife and me as we get settled here in Cohasset. We both look forward to many years of happiness in Cohasset.

MR. HAROLD LITCHFIELD
171 BEECHWOOD ST.
DEAR HAROLD:

This is to express my best wishes for a fulfilling and active retirement. You have served the Town and its people well.

As President of the Lighkeepers the last few years, I can express our appreciation for the prompt efficiency with which Government Island was sanded and plowed and for your assistance in expanding the Edwin Young parking lot. It certainly was appreciated also by our fellow citizens who had planned events in Bancroft Hall.

As a private citizen, I appreciate that you dealt promptly and effectively with a drainage problem affecting one of my properties, and I know that this was typical of your good work.. Although I have expressed criticism of the Town's limited support for improvements, it seems to me that you have very effectively used such funds as were made available..

Enjoy a well-earned retirement!

LIBRARY CORNER

Children's Room

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library presents selections from the musical, "Oliver!" performed by local children involved in the Cohasset Dramatic Club. It is a great opportunity for the entire family to be entertained by our talented young people and to preview this wonderful play. The performance will take place Thursday, April 11 at 4:30 p.m. and will last approximately one hour. The performance will be held in the Children's Room and will be followed with light refreshments provided by the Friends of the Library.

Reference section

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library has some exciting new additions to the reference section. We have recently acquired the 29-volume New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians; the 34-volume Oxford English Dictionary. These works are useful to students as well as fun and illuminating to the casual reader.

Story hour

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library is now accepting registrations for the Spring Story Hour. Children between the ages of 3 and 5 are welcome to participate. The program will consist of six sessions and will begin April 22 and end May 27. Monday and Thursday morning sessions from 10 to 11 a.m., and a Tuesday afternoon session from 1 to 2 p.m. You may register by phone 781-383-1348) or in person. Space is limited.

Needs assessment

Tell us what you want! If you attended town meeting, you may have noticed and used one of the library questionnaires asking your opinion on what materials and services you would like your library to offer.

If you missed that survey chance, you can still give us your input. Stop by the library and fill out one of our new "Needs Assessment" forms. Our aim is to make sure that we are meeting the community needs, supplying the types of materials and formats that Cohasset residents would use most.

We are also looking for your guidance in planning programs and activities that we might sponsor when we move into our spacious new building. Please take this opportunity to let the library know how to serve you better.

What's new

The Children's Room of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library has recently acquired many new reference books to assist students with their work. They are located in the juvenile reference section.

A homework station has been established in the juvenile non-fiction area, complete with computer and appropriate software.

Twinkle, twinkle little star: How I wonder where you are

COMMON GROUND

AMY WHORF MCGUIGGAN

A satellite view of the United States taken at night and showing the wasted light that obscures the night sky.

On those now rare occasions when, away from the harshness of city and suburban lights, I have the opportunity to look up at a pitch black sky spangled with stars, I can't help but envy my ancestors whose every glance skyward was a journey for the eye, signposted by a wash of heavenly fires, out toward the beginning of creation.

Years ago, while living in Scotland, I had my first opportunity to experience the night in a way our hunter-gatherer forebears had. The dark, remote recesses of the Scottish highlands were punctuate only by the occasional pale light bulb and the soft, buttery glow from behind farmhouse windows. There were no backyard incandescent flood lights, no mercury vapor streetlights, no halogen headlights to take away the night. That primal Scottish landscape supported a vaulted ceiling of infinity, an eternity on which prehistoric man — the first astronomers — pondered the very same stars we see today and the silver river of starlight known as the Milky Way. They watched in fear and reverence as comets and meteors streaked, auroras shimmered, the moon and sun eclipsed and planets wandered. To make sense of the vastness and mysteries of the universe, early cultures gathered the heavenly fires into star patterns called constellations and told stories about the gods, heroes and beasts who roamed across the night sky.

It fell to a few early Greeks to begin explaining — rationally — the movements of celestial bodies, and to other thinkers, including Copernicus (1473-1543), Galileo (1564-1642) and Newton (1642-1700) to bring further order to the universe. These days, powerful radio telescopes enable us to time travel and "look" back hundreds of millions of years. Technology can predict celestial events for years to come. Computer enhanced pictures — available at the click of the mouse — provide us with intimate and exhilarating views of nebulae, star clusters and far flung galaxies. Yet, the old fashioned backyard astronomy, the kind of sky watching that triggers a child's imagination and curiosity, that tingles the viscera and provides a sense of connectedness and perspective, is all but lost. By some estimates, 95 percent of the world's population will never directly appreciate the lustre and majesty of the night sky.

"For millions of years we had the sky and now it's been taken away," laments Louis Gentile, President of the South Shore Astronomical Society. "What should be a dazzling nightly show has been ruined by light pollution. We've lost the complexity of the constellations and, in many places, the Milky Way is extinct."

Sean Maroney, the Society's Secretary, echoes the lament.

"The stars are our legacy," he says. "Every culture through the ages has had a cosmology, a relationship with the night sky that gave people a sense of their place in the universe. We're the first generation to destroy that link."

On any given night in the Northern Hemisphere the unaided eye should be able to see 2,500 stars. In fact, we see a mere 200. More than 90 percent of the stars are obscured by wasted artificial light, light intended to illuminate roadways, backyards, billboards and shopping malls but which, instead, "trespasses" into the sky. One need only look at satellite photographs of Earth taken at night to see just how much light we waste — some estimates put the amount of wasted outdoor lighting at 50 percent, the cost to consumers in the billions — light that renders telescopes, and the human eye, virtually useless. Paradoxically, the bright, harsh lights that bathe our landscape, lights that are intended to make our nights more secure and our neighborhoods safer may, in fact, be lulling us into a false sense of security. The human eye adapts to the brightest level of light, thus preventing it from seeing into the peripheral shadows of parking lots, backyards and along roadsides where dangers may lurk. And, if we are never able to embrace the dark, feel it wrap around us, how are we ever to know it without fear?

On any given night in the Northern Hemisphere the unaided eye should be able to see 2,500 stars. In fact, we see a mere 200.

Through the efforts of amateur astronomers, safety and consumer advocates, and environmentalists who have their own concerns that light pollution is disrupting animal migration patterns, awareness of light pollution is reaching the general public. Here in Massachusetts, a bill has been introduced in the Legislature — H 3528 — that would "Limit Outdoor Night Lighting, Conserve Energy and Reduce light Pollution." Proponents of the "dark skies" bill, and other measures like it around the world, are not recommending the elimination of safety and security lights, only that night lighting be made more efficient, that unnecessary lights be turned off at night or replaced with motion sensors, and that lights be shielded or directed downward to prevent the "blight on the night."

"We'll never be able to return the night sky to what it looked like in Galileo's day," says Louis Gentile, "but we can improve the sky enough so that people can again look through a backyard telescope and experience that exhilarating connection when photons from a celestial object hit their eye. I liken that physical contact to hearing live music in a concert hall. There's nothing like getting it right from the source."

Astronomy Day

And get it from the source you can on April 19 (rain date, April 20) when the South Shore Astronomical Society, in cooperation with the Trustees of Reservations, celebrates Astronomy Day atop Turkey Hill. Now internationally recognized, Astronomy Day (officially April 20) began in 1973 when members of the Astronomical Association of Northern California set up telescopes on sidewalks, in parking lots and in parks and invited the public to take a peek. So popular was the event that amateur clubs, museums, schools and nature center's worldwide began hosting lectures, exhibits, essay contests and, of course, viewings to commemorate the day.

The South Shore Astronomical Society, organized in Hingham in 1958 and now based in Norwell, hosts public viewing nights every Saturday - weather permitting - in Norwell's Centennial Park. The Astronomy Day event at Turkey Hill begins at 6 p.m. and will include children's activities, a solar system slideshow and introductory lessons about navigating the night sky. For more information, contact Louis Gentile at 781-545-7067 or check out the Society's web site at www.ssastros.org.

Those interested in learning more about the issue of light pollution can begin their journey with www.darkskies.org or www.darkskyinstitute.org. For those interested in navigating the night sky, the Abrams Planetarium at Michigan State University publishes a detailed monthly Sky Calendar. Go to www.pa.msu.edu/abrams/diary.html for a sample.

Bad manners, too common

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

A study by one of those nosy non-profit groups with time on its hands surveyed more than 2,000 of my fellow Americans the other day only to find out what I could have told them over morning coffee at Jimmy's Restaurant — we're becoming awfully rude to each other.

Instead of giving up a seat on the subway to a pregnant woman, we're more likely to race her for it.

Deborah Wadsworth, president of the group, Public Agenda, attributes the epidemic of bad manners to the strains of modern family life and the workplace that have made Americans too frustrated to remember to be polite or teach their children to say "please" and "thanks."

Last but far from least, the cell phone is playing a premier role in chipping away at civility in America.

The Rule of Rudeness is so bad in the South, where courtesy and hospitality used to be taken for granted, that the state of Louisiana has enacted legislation requiring elementary school students to address their teachers "yes, sir" and "no, ma'am."

I don't know about you, but I attribute at least part of the current lack of courtesy to the women's rights movement.

Just the other day, I held the door open for what I thought was an elderly woman only to get yelled at as a male chauvinist who had not yet learned that women are perfectly capable of doing a man's job like opening doors and flying fighter planes.

I would have beaten that pregnant woman to the seat on the subway, too, if she hadn't tripped me and applied a hammerlock as I lay helpless on the floor.

When I was young, and ice covered most of the earth, a gentleman never, never, never swore in front of a woman. Even an occasional "hell" or "damn" was reason enough to wash a boy's mouth out with soap. And, believe me, the d— stuff tasted like h—!

Now, hell and damn appear in even the most abridged dictionary and lexicographers — and cable TV channels — are working hard to make other four-letter Anglo-Saxon functional verbs acceptable in mixed company.

Last but far from least, the cell phone is playing a premier role in chipping away at civility in America.

How many times have you sat down to dinner in a fine restaurant (where fried scallops cost more than $10 by my measurement) only to be interrupted by a cell phone ringing at the next table and the callee engage in a long, loud, inane conversation?

It got so bad in Moose's, a San Francisco restaurant, that when Ed Moose, the proprietor, found that guys at one end of the bar were phoning friends at the other end, he banned cell phones from his establishment altogether. Besides, his chef was complaining that his food was spoiling.

"The phone rings, people leave their food and start talking — it's impolite, it's distracting, and it's not right," said Moose.

Most of those in the Public Agenda survey agreed with him.

Lightkeepers offers Beacon Award

Cohasset Lightkeepers Beacon Award is to provide unsolicited financial recognition to a high school senior who has voluntarily served the community of Cohasset.

This is an opportunity to nominate someone other than yourself who has demonstrated a focus on the future by enrolling for further education or starting up their own business. Just as lightkeepers served the coastal South Shore community, the nominee should be noted for selfless service to others. Up to $1,000 will be awarded directly to the selected senior. Nomination forms are available at the Guidance Office and in Town Hall outside the Recreation Dept. office. (Cohasset Lightkeepers Corp., PO Box 514)

POLITICAL NOTES

Bradley opts for furlough

In an attempt to help Massachusetts' current fiscal crisis, state Rep. Garrett J. Bradley, D-Hingham, along with other state representatives opted to participate in an eight-day furlough. The legislative payroll administrators will withhold two days pay in four different payroll periods.

"Unfortunately, as a result of these difficult fiscal times, revenue has declined significantly and that has, and will, result in budget cuts," said Bradley. "I am just trying to chip in to make a small but symbolic effort to help with the budget crisis."

Bill closes loophole defining pornography

The Massachusetts State Senate passed a bill co-sponsored by Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, that clarifies prohibitions on the dissemination of child pornography using computers. The legislation is designed to fix a loophole that currently exists in Massachusetts law. The limited definition of the term "visual material" has resulted in some Massachusetts courts holding that the current statute does not prohibit the dissemination of child pornography through computer images. The existence of this technicality has resulted in recent court cases in which charges have been dismissed against alleged pedophiles. Senate Bill 192 seeks to remove any question as to the consideration of computer images as visual material and will limit judges' discretion in ruling on such matters.

The legislation restates the intention of the General Court to prohibit "the creation, dissemination and possession of pictures of child pornography, without regard to the medium used to store or create such images." The bill is designed to acknowledge the increasing spread of pornography on the Internet and storage of such images in computers. "All efforts should be made to protect the interests of our children," Hedlund said.

Hill gives selectmen incumbents a scare experience was positive.

"I'm disappointed that I lost," Hill said. "But I showed if you have enough conviction in your opinions it is possible to make a difference."

Hill, who said he spent a little more than $300 on his campaign, added that he was upset that that there was such a poor voter turnout and said those who didn't vote, should not complain about how the town is managed.

"Well, at least I can say whatever I want to the selectmen now," Hill conceded.

Koed said he was a little surprised the race was so close but credited Hill with putting forth a lot of effort."I think Roger (Hill) worked very hard on his campaign," Koed said. "He was very close to being on the board."

Koed didn't spend any money this time around.

"I thought people would see my credentials and my résumé and vote based on that," he said. "I'm glad I got re-elected."

Town Clerk Marion Douglas reported approximately 24 percent of registered voters went to the polls Saturday — about 1,200 of the 5,082 registered voters in Cohasset turned out.

"It was probably a little on the low side compared to other years," Douglas said. "There was only one race so the interest may not have been there."

Selectman Ronnie McMorris, who was very pleased with the results of the election, said she was surprised the turnout was so low. She blamed the low count on the lack of publicity and races this year.

"I really appreciate all the help and support I got," McMorris said. "I think it's now time to put our differences aside and come together to run the town."

McMorris added she didn't feel a need to run a strong campaign this year which may be why the results were so close.

"I got the sense I had plenty of support in the community," she said.

There wasn't the fervent competition for selected town seats this year as there has been in the past, and there was one position filled by someone, who didn't even have his name on the ballot.

James Richardson, 86 Brewster Road, was elected by write-in votes for a position on the Recreation Commission. The spot was vacated by David Marks, who decided not to run. He joined Lillian Curley and Mary Muncey as the three citizens to be elected to the commission this spring.

"I'm pleased to have someone fill the vacancy," said Recreation Commissioner Jack Worley.

Others elected include:

Robin M. Lawrence - Board of Health

Ralph Perroncello - Cohasset Housing Authority

Alfred Moore - Planning Board

Raymond Kasperowicz - Sewer Commission

Glenn Pratt - Water Commission

George Marlette - Town Moderator

Marion Douglas - Town Clerk

Left: James Porter checks in to vote at Town Hall with election workers Carla Getto and Peggy Hernan. About 24 percent of Cohasset's registered voters went to the polls Saturday. Below: Selectman Ronnie McMorris, center, was the top vote-getter in Saturday's election that featured only one race. McMorris and Koed were reelected but Roger Q. Hill came within about 100 votes of unseating one of the incumbents.

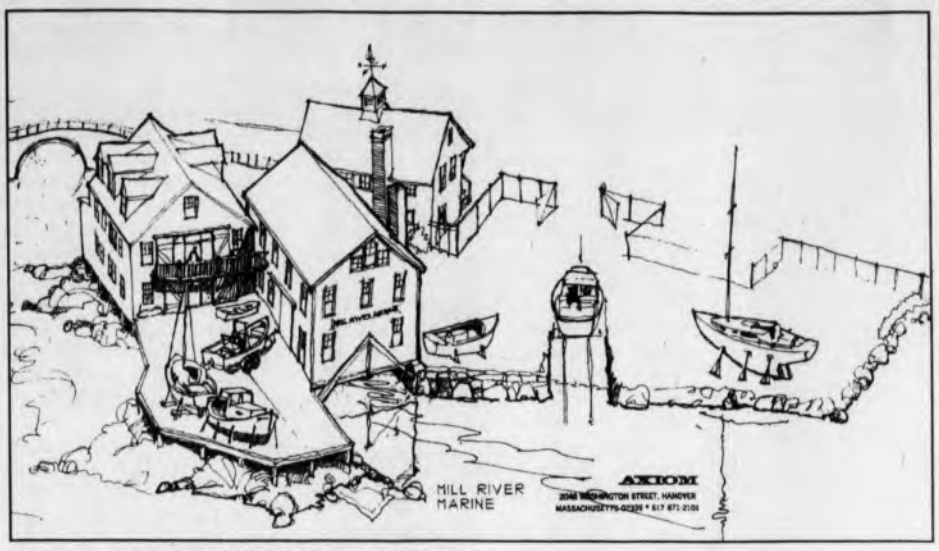
Mill River Marine project not sunk

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Cohasset is the quintessential New England town defined not only by its form of government, but by the beautiful town common and rocky ledge that protrudes from many properties. There is also the harbor area, which many think gives Cohasset its character.

"The Town Meeting vote did not kill the project."

— Charles Humphreys, attorney for the project



An architect's rendering of the Mill River Marine project.

But the town's "Motif #1" – at the old boatyard off Border Street – is in danger of falling into the rapids so popular with kayakers. Local businessman Peter Roy, who bought the site that includes a hodgepodge of buildings, has plans to restore the Mill River Marine Railway area.

However, Town Meeting voters dealt the plan a blow last week when they did not reinstate the ability to grant "use" variances in the zoning by-law. Roy plans to build two condominiums at the site – but residences are not allowed in a waterfront business district.

Roy's project also aims to remove the tin shed and the Quonset hut and restore of the lobster pound, the main building and the Eastwick building.

But proponents for the project insist all is not lost.

"The Town Meeting vote did not kill the project," said Charles Humphreys, attorney for the project.

Humphreys said the proponents are going to go before the Planning Board and the Zoning Advisory Committee to propose a mixed use zoning bylaw in the waterfront district. The amendment would allow for mixed uses, such as commercial and residential, in the harbor. The zoning amendment could be put before the special Town Meeting in the fall.

"The town needs to decide if they want to see the boatyard maintained with its charm," Humphreys said. "We want to restore it, but we need the condos there to give it some financial viability."

But some are not supportive of a total renovation to the area.

Howie Altholz of Summer Street, a member of the Friends of Harbor, said minor tweaking is all the harbor needs.

"Development on the harbor needs to be viewed very carefully," he said. "There may be some minimal improvements and basic maintenance that needs to be done but not a total overhaul."

Plans for harbor move along

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

Other improvements to the harbor could come by way of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, a private entity currently working in conjunction with the village revitalization task force on village improvements. While still concentrating on the village, the CRC is mapping out plans for proposed changes to the harbor.

The CRC was holding public forums on the drawings before receiving a demand from the selectmen that it stop, which was later rescinded. The last public meeting in January drew mixed reviews from a crows that was hesitant to embrace changes to the harbor.

The CRC has plans aim to:

- Link the various public and private properties along the harbor's edge
- Enhance pedestrian and bicycle safety and convenience
- Facilitate vehicle and pedestrian access through the creation of clear delineation between parking, walking, biking and vehicle travel along Border Street
- Preserve and enliven the rich maritime history of the waterfront

The walk would work its way down Margin Street, around Kimball's, and up Border Street to Government Island.

Dean Rizzo, executive director for the CRC said he is currently in the process of developing two plans for the community to consider. One is simply a maintenance plan which aims to tidy up the area and the other is a more comprehensive plan that really addresses the safety issues in the harbor. Rizzo hopes to procure grants for the latter plan but said the former is not substantial enough to necessitate grants, therefor the town would have to pay.

"We understand the constraints of municipal funding that's why we drew up two plans, one which would require the town to spend some money and another which wouldn't," Rizzo said.

Rizzo said he plans to meet with various boards and committees in town, including the Friends of the Harbor, to gather opinions about the drawings. He said there may be a public workshop on the designs in late May or early June.

RFP to go out for village work

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The town is one step closer to a new village.

Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen Tuesday he has advertised the Request For Proposals for the engineering services for the village revitalization. He said he expects to get a large number of bids back and hopes to narrow them down, with help from Town Planner Liz Harrington, to about five before making a decision.

The intent of the RFP is to finalize the design drawings so the project is ready to go out for construction bids. The firm that is selected will take the plans done by the Cecil Group and the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation and fine tune them until it is complete.

Harrington said the chosen firm will also be responsible for providing ongoing management services for all the other projects that will be undertaken in the village. This includes the James Brook Flood Mitigation construction and the MBTA project.

"Given the number of projects we have coming up in the next few years we want to make sure we have someone in place to coordinate them all," Harrington said. "We want to make sure we can save costs by combining the construction we do."

Haddad said he will allow the selectmen to make the final decision on which firm to hire, a luxury usually reserved for the town manager.

"This has been a very public process and this continues that," he said. "All the decisions made will receive plenty of public input."

Harrington said there will probably be a workshop in early summer to discuss the design drawings.

"The more input we get from the community, the better," she said.

The St. Stephen's sidewalk is currently slated be the first part of the village revitalization project to see construction.

"All the decisions made will receive plenty of public input."

— Town Manager Mark Haddad

The improvements will be centered around four areas, Elm Street, Ripley Road, Depot Court, and the town parking lot.

Work on the village could start the spring of 2003. The estimated $2-1/4 million revitalization project could be paid for with no direct cost to Cohasset taxpayers.

The $1.5 million Public Works Economic Development Grant along with the $169,000 transportation enhancement grant, which will be used for the sidewalk on South Main Street in front of St. Stephen's Church, will pick up most of the tab.

The MBTA will pay to reconstruct the town parking lot and the Ripley Road intersection by the South Shore Art Center in the village as part of the Greenbush train restoration project.

State grant for Lily Pond

State Sen. Robert Hedlund and Rep. Garrett Bradley announced the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs has awarded the Town of Cohasset a $25,000 matching grant for a Lake and Watershed Management project at Lily Pond.

The project calls for the preparation of a lake and watershed management plan. The plan will study the ecological impacts of accelerated eutrophication, the process by which a body of water becomes enriched in dissolved nutrients (such as phosphates) that stimulate the growth of aquatic plant life, usually resulting in the depletion of dissolved oxygen, and will recommend appropriate long and short-term solutions.

"I am very happy Cohasset has been awarded this grant," said Bradley. "It will allow Cohasset's town officials, who have worked so hard for this grant, to implement a plan for the future of Lily Pond."

Katie had a bright future

tive tone. She said she tells the story of Katie to put a face on the tragedies to all the offenders in her audience.

"They see so many faces of people that have been killed by drunk driving," she said. "But when I show them the picture of Katie and say, 'This is my niece, she was killed by a drunk driver it really sinks in.'"

Telling her listeners the story of how Katie died usually moves many of them to tears.

Katie was like any other 13-year-old, she had braces, was first in her class and loved Beanie Babies. She lived in Narragansett, R.I., a tiny community in a small state which is cushioned against the beach.

One afternoon her friend's mother picked her up to take her, and her companion, to the mall. It was a beautiful day, the weather conditions were perfect for driving, and everyone in the car had their seat belts buckled. Unfortunately, that doesn't matter to drunk drivers.

The car Katie was in was struck from behind by the inebriated driver, sending it over the median into oncoming traffic were it was slammed again, splitting the car in two pieces. The impact instantly killed Katie and the mother. Her friend in the car survived.

Liddell said her sister, Meg DeCubellis, called over to Katie's friend's house to tell her daughter she received her Halloween dress. A state trooper answered the phone.

Forty-five minutes later two uniformed police officers made the slow walk up the DeCubellis' driveway and knocked on the door.

"It's a mother's worst fear to have two officers knock on your door and tell you there's been an accident," Liddell said. "Katie just never came home."

The single mother of two tells her audience how her sister was taken to the hospital in a wheelchair because she couldn't stand and was wheeled into Katie's room.

"She just kept rubbing her legs, trying to warm her up," Liddell said. "She didn't want her to be so cold."

Liddell said she never thought she would have to plan a funeral for a younger relative. She added when a tragedy such as this strikes, ones' whole world is shaken with the realization that you can't control life.

"Everything we did to protect her, teaching her good versus bad, wrong versus right, doesn't matter now," Liddell said. "You always think about how you're going to provide for your kids but you never think about what they're going to look like in their coffin."

Liddell said she relives the event every time she speaks to a group, usually around 75 to 100 people, which is about once a month. She said she always prays to Katie to help her through the speech and ends up crying every time.

"I go because if one person in the group realizes they have a problem with alcohol and they need help, I feel I've made a small difference," she said. "My message is not to stop drinking, it's to stop driving if you've have been drinking."

After telling her story, Liddell usually leaves the audience sobbing because "they realize it could've been them." She said the hardest part about fighting drunk driving is trying to stop an enemy you can't readily identify.

"You can't see alcoholism," she said. "You can't just point a finger at a car and say 'That person is drunk.'"

For all her work, MADD will recognize Liddell as its Volunteer of the Year this Saturday, April 13. The awards ceremony is going to be held at the Country Club of Halifax and will begin at 9:30 a.m. For more information or to become involved with MADD contact Cheryl Bagangan at 781-585-1888.

Martha Henderson named to MADD Youth Summit

As underage drinking continues to threaten the lives of young people and alcohol remains the number one drug problem among youth in America, State Representative Garrett J. Bradley, D-Hingham, and state Senator Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, announced their nomination of Martha Henderson from Cohasset to participate in a Youth Summit in May 2002 organized by Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD).

"It is rewarding to see this level of involvement from our future leaders. I applaud Martha for her desire to really make a difference."
— State Rep. Garrett Bradley

The summit will provide a forum for high-school aged youth from across the state to develop proposals to curb underage drinking. Alcohol kills 6.5 times more young people than all other illicit drugs combined. Moreover, a recent study by Boston University's School of Public Health reported that the younger people are when they state drinking alcohol, the more likely they are to drive after excessive drinking and get into alcohol-related car crashes over the courses of their adult lives.

"It is rewarding to see this level of involvement from our future leaders," said Bradley. "I applaud Martha for her desire to really make a difference."

Martha, who is a junior at Notre Dame Academy, says in addition to legislation, teenagers need to hear the message from their peers.

"I hope the 79 other student delegates and I can make an imprint on the minds of legislators so that real change can be made that will prevent underage drinking and drunk driving," she said. "I addition to formulating new ideas for new legislation, I hope we can also reach out to our peers because I think it is very important for teenagers to hear the message from other teenagers to whom they can relate and share common experiences."

The summit will take place at the Westin Waltham Hotel, May 5-7 and the delegates will hold a press conference at the Statehouse to announce the policy recommendations agreed to during the summit. Delegates will then meet with their respective Representatives and Senators individually to discuss their proposals.

"Raising awareness about the dangers associated with underage drinking is critically important," said Hedlund. "It's great to see Martha and other young people like her getting involved in this effort."

MADD recently sent applications to every high school in the state and to all state elected officials in an effort to help identify student leaders for the gathering. MADD's goal is to have at least 80 high school students selected from across the state. Space is limited at the summit and applications are still being accepted.

"Since the founding of MADD in 1900, we have made significant progress in focusing the public on alcohol-related driving and the number of fatalities that result from that behavior," said MADD State Executive Director Barbara Harrington. "The fact that these crashes are on the rise once again should concern us all. It isn't enough to get MADD, we need people to get involved. Research shows that the earlier young people drink, the more likely they are to develop alcohol problems as adults."

Martha Henderson

As further to the necessity of the summit, MADD cites a number of startling statistics:

- Eight young Americans die every day in alcohol-related traffic crashes.
- Underage drinking cost Massachusetts $934 million annually.
- Underage drinking costs the United States more than $53 billion every year-enough to buy every public school student a state-of-the-art computer.
- More tenth graders will get drunk this year than will go on to graduate college.

Founded in 1980, MADD's mission is to stop drunk driving, support victims of this violent crime and prevent underage drinking. To receive an application for the Massachusetts Youth Summit to Prevent Underage Drinking or to find out more about MADD, please call Bradley's office at (617) 722-2120, Hedlund's office at (617) 722-1646 or MADD directly at 1-800-633-6233.

Tiger Lily nuzzles her newborn foal Kilroy. The miniature horse was born Friday night at Precious Petals' owner Bette Kelly's Norwell home.

Precious Petals owner has new baby pony

By Alice Coyle
ACOYLE@CNC.COM

Precious Petals owner Bette Kelly has a new addition to her family.

Bette's miniature horse, Tiger Lily, gave birth to a foal named Kilroy Friday night in the corral at her Norwell home.

Kilroy is the fifth in Bette's herd of horses which includes a Lippizzaner stallion named Hansel, a buckskin quarter horse named Red Knight, a pony named Chubs and another miniature horse called Cody.

Bette's horses are well known around town thanks to their frequent appearances at events like Octoberfest —held right outside her North Scituate flower shop. While she's run Precious Petals for the last 10 years, Bette said her love of horses has been a life-long affair.

"They've been the love of my life ever since I was 2," said Bette, whose self-diagnosis for her girlhood obsession with everything equine is "horse fever."

While she never had a horse of her own to raise and ride as a girl, Bette said she collected the accoutrements of the trade throughout her youth, and when she and her husband James began a family of their own she made sure that each of her five children had their own horse, whether they wanted it or not.

"What I had wanted all those years for myself, I was doing for them," she noted.

The cost of keeping the horses was considerable, but Bette said she never thought twice about it.

"I'd rather pay a feed bill than a doctor's bill or a court bill," she said. "It kept everyone busy and out of trouble."

There was plenty of room for the horses to roam at the Kelly's First Parish Road home which abuts a large tract of conservation land. Bette's daughter, Cindy, who also works at the flower shop, said she loved riding the rural area near her home.

While she's run Precious Petals in North Scituate for the last 10 years, Bette said her love of horses has been a life-long affair.

Some of the Kelly kids even did their paper routes on horseback, recalls Bette, who has continued to keep horses despite the fact most of her children are grown and gone. Cindy's three children are the new generation of horse lovers in the Kelly household, Bette said.

But for Bette, delighting youngsters with her diminutive horses is not limited to her grandchildren. For more than a decade, Bette has been parading her ponies all over the South Shore for events and parties as part of her side business "Precious Pony."

After a 42-year-old pony she owned passed away, Bette decided she needed what she calls "a huggin' pony" something little kids could come and brush and talk to — that wouldn't frighten them. A Brockton women she met had just the thing — a bunch of miniature horses she inherited and didn't know quite what to do with.

Bette adopted 2-year-old Cody first. But costly surgeries Cody required initially made it impossible for her to bring any more miniature horses home to Norwell. But Cindy had her eye on a female foal at the time Cody was adopted and 11 months ago, Tiger Lily, a three-foot-tall horse with triple blond eyelashes joined the herd.

Lily, as she's known to Cindy, was expecting when the Kelly's bought her. And on Friday, the plucky horse gave birth on her own without the help of a veterinarian.

Bette said Lily is settling down to motherhood, but has been a bit testy and protective of her two-foot-tall, 17-pound baby, Kilroy, who was named after artist and friend John Kilroy of Hull

"He has brown shaggy hair like John and stands like him," jokes Bette.

"He's beautiful," she says of the new foal. "He's like a little, huggy, teddy bear. I've been coming in late to the store every day," notes Bette, who can't resist spending some time with Kilroy.

Bette said she hopes to introduce Kilroy around town soon and plans on having the horses on hand again for Octoberfest.

Right now she's enjoying this rite of spring in her own backyard.

Along with the new baby horse, some of her 10 chickens' eggs have hatched and there are little chicks chirping through her happy farm yard.

"There's no doubt about it," Bette declares, "spring has sprung."

Far right, Tammy Elliott, auction chairwoman, works the phones.

Auction raises $13 K for TIC

Thirty volunteers from towns all over the South Shore frantically answered the phones as 120 items were auctioned over WATD 95.9 FM last week. The bids on Ray Bourque's autographed hockey stick and jersey (which was the highest priced item sold at $575); Red Sox and Globe Trotter tickets; dinners in local restaurants; overnights from Boston to Nantucket; and Joey Kramer's (of Aerosmith) drum sticks, donated by Zildgian were all sold for a good cause. The $13,000 raised goes directly to the Talking Information Center (TIC). TIC broadcasts newspapers, magazines and books to blind listeners throughout Massachusetts 365 days a year.

Auction Chair, Tammy Elliott of Cohasset and her assistant, Tonia Evans of Abington are both volunteer readers at TIC. Elliott started the fund-raiser five years ago. TIC Executive Director, Ron Bersani of Marshfield couldn't say enough about their efforts.

"This has not only become and excellent fund raiser," he said, "but also a really fun event that generates a lot of energy. Phones are ringing, volunteers are rushing around, bidders throughout the WATD listening area are involved — it is a great couple of days. I can't thank the volunteers enough — and especially Tammy and Tonia — for all the hard work it takes to put this together."

TIC is a non-profit radio reading service broadcasting 24 hours a day, seven days a week, to more than 20,000 visually-impaired listeners through Massachusetts from its main studio in Marshfield.

Five kitchens featured on community center tour

The South Shore Community Center is sponsoring a tour of some of the most unique kitchens in Cohasset on Friday, April 26, from 10:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. This is the sixth year the center has sponsored the kitchen tour, and this year's homes and samplings from local caterers promise to be some of the most spectacular to date.

This year's five Cohasset kitchens are varied in both architectural style and in the amenities they offer the homeowner. A Georgian colonial featuring high tech appliances and antique chestnut and soapstone countertops, a shingle style contemporary with spectacular views of Sandy Beach, and a 72-year-old stone castle featuring an Aga stove are just some of the surprises that will await this year's tour-goer.

Adding even greater interest to the variety of architectural and interior design styles of the five homes will be the artistry of local and out of town designers who will create beautiful table settings and floral arrangements for the kitchens and dining rooms in each home. And in case the tour-goer would like some inspiration on what could be created in these kitchens, local caterers will be represented at each home offering refreshments.

Tickets are $25 and may be purchased at the center by calling 781-383-0088. Tickets are limited, early purchase is recommended. Funds from the 2002 Kitchen Tour will be used to support the programs of the South Shore Community Center. The center, located at 3 North Main St. is a non-profit organization dedicated to a wide range of educational and enrichment programs for infants to seniors.

For more information about the kitchen tour or for a schedule of center courses, call 781-383-0088.

Dillon to talk about Cohasset geology

Peter Dillon will give a slide presentation on "The Geological Framework" of Cohasset on Sunday, April 14 at 2:30 p.m. at the Lightkeepers' Cottage.

Dillon received his BS in Geology and his MS in Geology/Geochemistry from Boston College. His master's thesis "The Geochemistry and Petrogenisis of the Dedham Plutonic Series, Eastern Massachusetts, USA" was focused on the origin and age of granites found locally in Cohasset and resulted in the naming of one of these granites the Cohasset Granite.

He served as a hydrogeologist for the Mass Department of Environmental Protection before becoming a consultant. Recently, he was awarded the Outstanding Groundwater Project of 2001 by the National Groundwater Association for his work on a 4.5 million gallon per day water supply at the Massachusetts Military Reservation.

Dillon was born and raised in Cohasset, the son of Ed and Barbara Dillon. He and his wife now reside in Norwell were he is a water commissioner and a cember of the Board of Health.

This lecture is sponsored by the Cohasset Garden Club and the public is welcome. The meeting is one of a educational series given by this garden club which in the past has had experts speak on such subjects as salt marshes, coastal beaches, open space conservation, bird habitat, and organic gardening and composting.

Ripley keeps time moving

Hanover. After seeing that the clock had stopped a few weeks ago, Ripley took it upon himself to fix the problem.

"It just looks bad when you have a clock stopped in a prominent location," he said. "It makes the town look lazy."

The town clock has a storied history. Today church and government must be separate, but back when the First Parish church was built that was not the case.

The First Parish building was constructed in 1714 by area residents tired of traveling to the Congregational church in Hingham. When the church's congregation outgrew the original building, a new one was built in 1747. This is the building that stands on the common today.

The meeting house on the common is a direct descendant of Hingham's original First Parish, now called "The Old Ship." In a community where religious parishes and secular precinct government were closely related, the Colonial meeting house was the center of both the religious and governmental activity of its citizens.

This was the first meeting house for parish, precinct and the town government. It became privately owned in 1824 and the clock in the steeple of the First Parish Church on the town common was installed in tower in the early 1800s.

Three years ago the steeple underwent extensive renovations for the first time in more than 100 years. The repairs to the clock face included repairing the moldings, painting the four dials and applying gold leaf to the clock hands, as well as the numerals and minute markers.

In a previous interview, town archivist David Wadworth said the First Parish building is "easily the most historic building in town." The Declaration of Independence was read to the town from the church's pulpit. A secret room was constructed there to store ammunition during the Revolutionary War, and the bell was rung to mark the end of every American war this century.

With all the history of the building and clock, it's easy to understand why the agile 73-year-old quickly scampered up the various ladders, which are extremely steep, to the top of the steeple to examine the clock. The clock boasts a 60-pound pendulum along with 600-pound weights that help to keep the clock running and keep it wound.

"It's so amazing to think that this machine can still work after almost 200 years," he said. "Think about it, most cars stop running after ten."

Ripley, who does the work for an annual $100 stipend which he donates to charity, said if the clock is running properly it can go three months with out slowing down a minute. He also works on the town clocks in Hingham, Norwell, Quincy and Bridgewater.

"The clock gives life to the center of town," he said. "It's important to maintain its integrity."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the town clock is part of Cohasset's character.

"It's a symbol of the common and is a showpiece of the town," he said.

Most of the town clocks Ripley works on, are the product of a Hingham-born clock maker named Edward Howard. Ripley said Howard is a legendary clock maker and who got his start in the area.

While he enjoys working on the larger timepieces, Ripley fixes about 500 watches and clocks a year. He said the problem with most of the items is that they need to be cleaned.

"My favorite is when customers come in and say, 'There's nothing wrong with my clock, it just doesn't work," he said. Ripley said most can be repaired in a day but he has spent months fixing some timepieces.

Ripley, who has traveled the world as a diplomatic courier, describes himself as someone who just likes to be self-reliant. He has built a workshop on his property in which he works on boats, cars and "anything I can get my hands on." That includes Ripley's house, 179 S. Main St., which was built in 1695, making it the oldest in Cohasset.

Ripley said he's always been mechanical and has wanted to be in business for himself for some time. He generally charges a flat rate for his services and says he has spent up to a year on some pieces.

"There's no magical formula," he said. "It's a trial and error process."

Garden Club honors Eisenhaure

Mary Eisenhaure of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset recently received the Award of Merit at the South Shore District annual meeting held at The Barker Tavern in Scituate.

Mary's adventurous spirit led her to accept the position of newsletter editor, knowing that she had yet to master the use of her computer. She not only persevered in her acquisition of knowledge to produce the newsletter, but continued to make improvements to enhance and beautify its appearance. Last year the club was awarded the Tommy Donnan Certificate of Merit for State Region, District and Club Publication for Mary's newsletter.

As corresponding secretary, Mary writes the necessary letters and cards with warmth and thoughtfulness. She offers her home and grounds for the club functions as well as her heart and hands. For her diligence, generosity and creativity, the Community Garden Club of Cohasset honors Mary Eisenhaure.

Boys track team knocks off Carver in battle of unbeatens

By Mike Spellman

And the beat goes on.

Many thought the Cohasset boys would be hard pressed to come anywhere near the level of success they enjoyed last spring on the track, but with three meets down and four to go, its been same old, same old for the defending unbeaten South Shore League champs.

The Skippers pulled off a huge 70-65 win on the road Monday over league rival Carver, knocking off the only other unbeaten team in the SSL to improve to 3-0.

"That was a big one," said veteran Cohasset coach Al LaFontain. "We've had match up problems with Carver in recent years, and that was the case again. They had some real good distance runners who were able to take first place points that we thought we might get, so it really came down to the wire."

In fact, it came down to the final field event, the discus, with Cohasset needing at least a second place finish to hold on for the win. Senior Steve Laney did just that, making the second best toss. For good measure, junior Cosimo Cambi took the third place point in the pivotal event.

Cambi also had a win in the 400-meter race that proved huge. Indeed, with five points spelling the difference, every point proved rather large.

Lady laxers begin season with impressive win over Marshfield

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset High lady laxers started what they hope will be another playoff charge with an encouraging 13-6 win over Div. 1 Marshfield in last Wednesday's season opener.

Senior captain Kristin Sheerin showed the form that made her an obvious All-Scholastic choice last year, racking up six goals and two assists. Well past the career 100-goal plateau, Sheerin will most likely be Cohasset's top scorer, and the quarterback of the offense.

With Cohasset opening up a large lead early in the second half, they were able to test out the new offense implemented by first year coach Torin Sweeney. In it, Sheerin calls plays from behind the net, setting the action in motion to try to scramble the opposing defense.

Juniors Maura McKenney and defensemen Katherine Coyne both scored in the winning effort, as did sophomore Nicole Trugiss, and freshman Lauren Rizzotti, in her first official varsity game. Juniors Rachel Smith and Sarah Brady both assisted two goals apiece in the win.

Coyne was also one of the team leaders on defense, along with the very fast pair of senior captain Carlie Carter and junior Julie Lordan. The Lady Rams had a few quick wingers who were able to penetrate the zone defense, but the defensive trio clamped down in the second half when Sweeney changed to man coverage.

"Marshfield had a run and gun style," explained Sweeney. "And

Race-by-the-Sea draws near record field

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Cohasset runners have protected their turf for the second straight year.

Native son Paul Stanislawzyk took first place overall among the 765 runners who completed Sunday's 26th annual Cohasset Road Race-by-the-Sea, covering the 10-kilometer run in 33:02— an outstanding pace of 5:20— to cross the finish line at the Cohasset Common well ahead of second place finisher Bob Chasen of Weymouth (34:45).

"It wasn't a bad day of running at all," reported Stanislawzyk, 36, who moved to Cohasset two years ago with his wife and two young daughters. "It was a little windy on Atlantic Ave. and it was a pretty hilly course, but it was a real nice race and very scenic. It was extremely well organized."

This was the first Race-by-the-Sea for Stanislawzyk, who was a distance runner for track teams at Boston Latin Academy and UMass-Amherst. He decided to get back into running a little more than a year ago. It obviously didn't taken him long to get back in to top shape, as his eighth place finish in Hingham's July 4th Road Race (25:08 for the 4.7-mile course) attests.

The top female finisher was Sarah Baker-Ladd, of Mattapoisett, who finished with a time of 39:54. Cohasset's top female finisher was Barbara Buckley, 40, who took third among the women with a run of 42:26.

Last year's female winner was Cohasset's Dyan Young. The male winner the previous two years was John Noland of Kingston. Neither runner participated this year.

The real winners this year, though, as every other year, were Cohasset students. The Cohasset Rotary Club, which sponsors the race, donates all proceeds to a scholarship fund. $21,000 was given in scholarships in 2001 to Cohasset High School students using race proceeds and other funds. The Rotary has given in excess of $400,000 to Cohasset students over the past 20 years.

This year's turnout of approximately 930 runners and 150 walkers was among the highest ever, making it a banner day for the scholarship fund. The fact that this was the first time in recent years that the weather turned out to be decent on race day no doubt had more than a little to do with that.

The race started near the town common on Highland Ave, moved to Elm Street, then to Atlantic Ave., to the coastal end of Jerusalem Road, to Forest Ave., to North Main Street and, finally, back to the Common for the finish.

With the Cohasset Rotary having only 20 or so members, volunteers

Boys remain perfect

Five goal effort from Kahn paces laxers in 9-5 win over Norwell

The Cohasset boys' lacrosse team may have found a potent new scoring combination.

Junior Matt Davis, moving to attack to fill in for the absent senior Jason Moore, found classmate Curt Kahn alone on the crease four times with pinpoint passes, and the visiting Skippers shook off an early deficit to cruise to a 9-5 victory in their Pilgrim League opener. Kahn would finish the game with five goals, while Davis threw in a pair of scores to go with his four assists.

The Skippers, who'd noted published comments by Norwell coach Frank Granara that stated beating Cohasset was one of his team's two 2002 goals, weathered an early second quarter 3-1 deficit and scored six unanswered goals over the second and third quarters.

Kahn began the run with his second and third goals of the game, the latter on an assist from senior Eric Libby. Davis then picked up a pair, the first on a slick dodge from behind the goal, and the second on a 45-yard clearing pass from senior goalie Kyle Weber, who picked up his first assist of the season. Kahn continued the string with the goal of the game, catching a pass from senior Paul Previte while on his knees, and quicksticking the ball into the net as a defender hit him. Then junior middie Tom Anderson finished the Clippers off with a driving shot from the center, off a feed from Davis.

Weber, a steady presence all afternoon, finished the game with 16 saves, eight in each half.

"This was a step forward for us after the opener," said coach Kevin Orcutt. "Any league game is important, and the first one even more so. Norwell has a veteran team that was 1-3 against us over the past two years. They wanted this badly, but we maintained our composure and possessed the ball when we needed to. This was a good win."

Both teams scored twice in the fourth quarter, but the emerging defense of junior Nick Spirito, senior Chris Caron and junior Ben Lynner responded to every Norwell challenge. Each team was hit with nine penalties during the game.

"I can't say enough about how quickly Lynner and Caron are coming along," said Orcutt. "They're getting great support from the two sophomores, Steve Davis and Conor Buick, and they bring a toughness from their football backgrounds that

Boys and girls tennis teams swept by powerhouse Hingham and Norwell squads

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The good news is that the tennis teams have gotten Hingham and Norwell out of the way early. The bad news is that the two powerhouse teams have left both Skipper squads in their own respective 0-2 holes.

Hingham, the defending Div. 1 South Sectional Champion last year for boys, and Norwell, who won the South Shore League for both genders, are far and away the two toughest teams the Skippers will face this year. Both teams were up to form early in the season, beating the very strong Lady Skippers and re-building mens' team.

Freshman Elizabeth Stone was the only singles player to win both of her matches, ripping both her opponents 6-0, 6-0. She had no problem dispatching the Harborwomen's number two on Friday, and had the same effect at third singles this past Monday against Norwell.

Stone's fellow frosh teammate Kate Englander had a great opening two matches as well. Against Hingham, Englander teamed up with junior captain Julie Shea to take a very good first doubles match against senior Meaghan Slaughter and sophomore Jess Purcell.

In a scrambled line-up on Monday, Englander played "out of her mind", according to coach Sarah Meehan, in a losing effort to All-Scholastic singles standout Sara Bitetti. Bitetti outhit the Skipper freshman in winning the first set 6-1, but Englander made some adjustments to even out the second set, finally falling 7-5.

"She was every bit in that match," said the 11th year girls coach. "Kate just had to realize that she could keep up with her."

Junior captain Lindsay Grossman played two terrific singles matches, but was unfortunate enough to run into two of the fastest rising stars on the South Shore. Freshman Megan Doyle of Hingham exploded onto the varsity scene in her match, taking down the two-time All-Star in a hard-fought match on both sides. Against Norwell, sophomore Angie Bizozzero finished off a three-hour, three set match with Grossman at second singles, providing a frighteningly similar flashback to last year.

In last year's match, also in Norwell, Bizozzero won a thrilling third set decision at third singles to give her team a 3-2 victory, and ensuring at least a share of the South Shore League title for the Lady Clippers.

Senior captain Kelly Stone and sophomore Courtney Caron recovered from a first match loss at second doubles to take the point against Norwell, 7-5, 6-2.

On the boys side, the results were very much the same, as matches were dropped to the best opponents they will face this year.

First year junior Ross Lieb-Lappen won the only point for Cohasset in either match, taking third singles against Hingham's David Cartier, 6-4, 7-5.

It was the first varsity match for both players, and was very close all the way through, with Lappen holding the advantage when rushing the net.

Lappen teamed with junior Scott Faber at first doubles against Norwell, losing in two sets to a surprisingly strong Clipper sophomore pair.

Junior captain David Ingber and sophomore Tim Anton faced four of the top players in Eastern Massachussetts at first and second singles, respectively.

Juniors Brian Marsden and Sam Bitetti, both two-time selectees to the All-Scholastic and All-Star teams, are both ranked in New England (Marsden is also ranked nationally), and had not trouble taking down Ingber in his debut at first singles.

Anton put up a good fight against Rob Becker and Mike Wiltshire, both league All-Stars from last year, but came up short, losing both in two sets.

Luckily for both of the Skipper singles players, the competition becomes much more manageable past Hingham and Norwell.

Sophomore Jessie Brewer lost his first match of the season at third singles, but held his own against former All-Scholastic doubles junior Rory O'Connor.

Junior Bryan Bilton and sophomore Andrew Buske played their first varsity match together at second doubles on Monday, but lost to the Clippers in two sets.

Sophomores Drew Hertig and Andrew Wise notched their first varsity wins though, winning their exhibition doubles match with ease.

were essential to the success of the race, and the good folks of Cohasset came through big time again, according to race organizer Tom Gruber.

"We had about 175 volunteers, most of them Cohasset residents," said Gruber. "We have a great race here, and these people who give freely of their time are a big part of that. We couldn't do this without them."

The all-time male race record is held by Boston's John Kessinger, his 1980 time of 29:30 still standing as the mark to beat 22 years later.

Cohasset's own Sarah Linsley, who won the female race in its first seven years, owns the women's record with her 1983 time of 33:25.

All-Scholastic Girls Basketball team

Cohasset's Grossman named among area's elite

Once again, selecting a set number of players to this team was no easy task. We had an abundance of girls hoop talent in Marinerland this winter, the most noteworthy indications of this being the successes of Div. 3 South Sectional semifinalists and South Shore League champion Abington (21-2), which placed four members on our All-Scholastic team.

Exceptional campaigns were also turned in by a handful of athletes from Div. 2 South Sectional quarterfinalist and Patriot League runners up Hingham (17-5) and Rockland high schools, who each have three members representing them. We've done our best to recognize individual talent from teams with not-so-evident successes, such as in Hanover, Marshfield, Norwell, and Cohasset.

A few of the players you see listed below as "Honorable Mentions" also received strong consideration for this team. However, after consulting with area coaches, players and other close observers, these are the 15 players we felt deserved to be recognized as our area's best.

Lindsay Grossman - Junior Guard - Cohasset

Lindsay Grossman

The Lady Skippers top scorer the past two seasons… averaged 15 points per game this season, and was named a South Shore League all-star… extremely quick and athletic with very strong basketball instincts…at her best in transition…also a stellar defender, she was generally matched up against the opposition's top perimeter scorer…a relentless competitor…a three sport standout for Cohasset High, Lindsay is a starter for the field hockey team and phenom on the tennis courts…she went 22-0 last season as the Lady Skippers' number one singles player (earning SSL and Mariner All-Star selections here as well)…a regular "high honor roll" student…Cohasset coach Ellen Carr: "We were at our best when Lindsay was on the floor, no doubt about that. She kept us going at both ends, offense and defense. Her competitiveness kept us going too."

Brittany Cheney - Senior (Capt.) Center - Abington

Brittany Cheney

Unquestionably one of the most dominant and talented basketball players on the South Shore, Cheney helped lead Abington to a South Shore League championship (12-0, 21-2 overall)…Although only 5'9", Cheney's impressive leaping ability equaled her to any 6-footer…Was the Green Wave's leading scorer and rebounder with 408 points (17.7 ppg) and 205 boards (10.2 rpg)…Her performance this season helped Abington advance to the semifinals of the Div. 3 South Sectional tourney and was voted SSL Player of the Year honors…A four-time SSL All-star, Cheney achieved a milestone this year by scoring her 1,000th career point…The senior finished her four-year AHS career with a total 1,180 points…A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic in both basketball and soccer, Cheney also made our softball squad last year…Cheney plans to attend the University of Maine, where she will continue her softball career. Abington coach Mike Mayhew: "In my 35 years as a coach for both boys and girls, Brittany is one of the top three players I've ever seen. People were just amazed by what she could do. She's was the hardest working player in games and in practice. She's like the athletes of old. She goes full speed all the time. Second best isn't good enough for Brittany."

Katie Alexander - Senior (Capt.) Forward - Abington

Katie Alexander

Was the Green Wave's second leading rebounder with 152 (6.6 per game) despite her 5' stature…Quick and quiet, Alexander always seemed to be at the right place at the right time whether it be to sink a shot, pull down a board, or dish an NBA-style pass…Was the team's outright assists leader with 83 (4 per game) and led the Abington in steals with 60…What Alexander may have lacked in size, she made up for with her aggressive and smart play…One of the best defensive players on the team, Alexander's performance on all fronts helped Abington (21-2) capture a South Shore League title (12-0) and an appearance in the Div. 3 South Sectional tourney…A two-time SSL All-star, Alexander is a two-time Mariner All-Scholastic in basketball and also made our soccer squad last fall…Alexander received a Coach's Award at the annual AHS hoop banquet…She plans to attend Southern New Hampshire College, where she will continue her soccer career. Abington coach Mike Mayhew: "She's our hard-nosed defensive stalwart. She has incredible rebounding skills for her size. She's a good passer and she runs well. She always started our breaks. She made what we did this year easy."

Jackie Anderson - Senior (Capt.) Point-guard - Abington

Jackie Anderson

Somewhat of a breakout year for the speedy Green Wave (21-2) point-guard, Anderson was a huge threat from behind the arch this season… Was the team's three-point leader with 40 (8.7 average per game)…The senior had the ability to light up a game and often times turned it around, consistently hit big three-pointers, most of which were from NBA distance…An excellent ball handler and solid defensive player, Anderson never limited herself to three-point land, often driving to the hoop against players far bigger in size…An intricate part of Abington's quick pass game, the two-time South Shore League All-star played a big role in the Green Wave's SSL title (12-0) and appearance in the Div. 3 South Sectional tourney…Anderson plans to attend either Simmons or Suffolk and continue her basketball career at either. Abington coach Mike Mayhew: "Jackie had a very nice season for us. As our point-guard, she had the ball in her hands a lot and always seemed to know what to do with it. She was one of those players who really cared about what we did. She was a great leader."

Stephanie Morrissey - Junior Guard/Forward - Abington

Stephanie Morrissey

Was the South Shore League champion Green Wave's second-leading scorer, averaging 15.3 ppg…A highly-skilled player, Morrissey had the ability to shoot from just about anywhere and consistently lit up the lane with her impressive drives…Was ranked second on the Abington team in three-pointers with 38…Although among the league's leading scorers, Morrissey's smarts on the court often led her to make an extra pass, rather than take a risky shot…Had a tremendous recovery from a badly sprained ankle sustained in a pre-state tourney scrimmage, playing in two Div. 3 South Sectional games just one week later…In a stellar comeback, Morrissey scored points in the team's quarterfinal win over Case, advancing the team to the semifinals…A two-time SSL All-star, Morrissey has made the Mariner All-scholastic hoop team for the second straight year…The junior received a Coach's Award at the annual AHS hoop banquet…She will be the top AHS player returning to the roster next season. Abington coach Mike Mayhew: "Stephanie was a great all-around player. She did a lot of things well for us. She was a steady player in all categories. She made good plays."

Melissa Murphy - Junior Point-guard - Rockland

Melissa Murphy

Blistering speed is this 5-footer's biggest strength allowing her to consistently weave through her opponents defenses… Despite her modest stature, Murphy was the team's leading scorer (16.3) placing her second in the Patriot League, in which Rockland finished third (8-4)…A threat from three-point land and deadly on a fast break, Murphy also led the team in assists and steals…The junior was a member of the Lady Bulldogs' State Championship hoop team in 2000…A two-time PL All-star, Murphy is making her second straight appearance on the Mariner hoop squad…Also a talented sprinter on Rockland's outdoor track team, Murphy was an All-Scholastic last spring…Last fall, Murphy helped lead the RHS cheerleading squad to a State Championship and will head to nationals this month. Rockland coach Mal Lannin-Cotton: "Her speed is her best asset, but she's also probably the best pure three-point shooter we have. She's fearless when going to the hoop. If she's open at all, she'll get there. She goes 120 percent all the time."

Liz Martin - Senior (Capt.) Center - Rockland

Liz Martin

An undeniable force inside the paint, Martin was the Lady Bulldog's leader in rebounds for the second-straight year…A highly-aggressive player, Martin knew only one way to play: Hard…Mostly regarded for her tough defense, particularly against players taller than herself, Martin (5'7") proved she could also score points, knocking down 157 for 7.5 ppg…Midway through the season, Martin routinely scored double-digit points to add to her stellar defensive techniques…Great positioning and impeccable timing allowed Martin to consistently out-rebound 6-footers like Duxbury's Krissy Van der Veen and EB's Bridget Larkin…Martin also plays soccer and softball at RHS…She was named to our All-Scholastic softball squad last spring…The senior plans to attend Bridgewater State College where she will continue her basketball career. Rockland coach Mal Lannin-Cotton: "I don't think there will ever be anyone like Liz. From the moment she stepped onto the court in eighth grade she just had this spark. I always knew that wherever the ball was, Liz would be right there."

Laura Goggin - Junior Forward/Guard - Rockland

Laura Goggin

Among the team's top scorers, Goggin had a breakout season for the Lady Bulldogs… Whether it be driving to the hoop, nailing a three-pointer, or key jump shot, Goggin consistently came up big for Rockland when needed most…Scored 226 points this season and averaged 10.8 ppg…A highly aggressive player, Goggin was not afraid to drive to the hoop against players far bigger than herself and usually got the shot and one…Also a solid defensive player, Goggin is a two-time Patriot League All-star…Her play helped lead the Lady Bulldogs to the Div. 3 South Sectional tourney…Also a talented cheerleader, Goggin helped lead the team to a Div. 3 State Championship last fall and will attend nationals this month…The junior also does outdoor track and field for RHS in the spring…Goggin competes on an AAU hoop team and also does All-star cheerleading. Rockland coach Mal Lannin-Cotton: "If we had a good game, you know Laura had a good game. We aren't that big so she had to play inside even though she's more of a guard. But she's one of the few players on the team that can go to the hoop get hit and still have it go in. She's a great athlete."

Jill McClelland - Sr.(Capt) Guard - Silver Lake

Jill McClelland

A four year starter who averaged seven points, 5.2 assists and 4.3 steals per game this season for the Lady Lakers…a phenomenal defender and a solid all-around player who got to move from point guard to her more natural off guard position this season…Old Colony League all-star…highpoint total this season was 15-points against Coyle Cassidy…Mariner All-Scholastic Honorable Mention last year…also a soccer and track team captain…was named an Old Colony League all-star and Mariner All-Scholastic for soccer this past fall season, in which she led SL in scoring (8 goals, 1 assist)…Spring Track team captain who specializes in the 100 and 300-meter hurdles…would like to play soccer in college if she winds up at a smaller school…has narrowed her likely choices down to Boston University and Elon College (North Carolina)…undecided on a major…Silver Lake coach Dick Steele: "Jill has a great team attitude and was a great leader on and off the floor, in practice, games, whatever. The really set a great example with her hustle, she'd run baseline to baseline and do a great job defending the whole floor."

Meghan Duffy - Junior Forward - Marshfield

Meghan Duffy

A three-year varsity player, Duffy emerged as one of the Old Colony League's best forwards and quickly became her opponents main focus… Despite the tough competition in the OCL—in which Marshfield played its first season—Duffy averaged an impressive 15 points per game, leading the team and placing her third among the league's top scorers…A highly-aggressive player, Duffy lives to go to the hoop…Also a consistent shooter from the field, Duffy caused most of her damage fearlessly driving up the lane, drawing fouls in the process…She was also the team's best free throw shooter with a 65 percent average and also pulled down a team-best 9 rebounds per game…Went 9-for-9 in second-half foul shots in the team's win over Falmouth…Also a talented field hockey player for MHS, Duffy plays second singles for the school's tennis team…Duffy is a member of the National Honor Society and also volunteers her time refereeing at Marshfield Youth Basketball games…The junior will captain the basketball squad next season. Marshfield coach Rick Fredericks: "She's a slasher. She's not a bad three-point shooter, but she'll take it to the basket 130 times a game. She has this great up and under move that she loves and it's really worked for her."

Bridget Driscoll - Senior (Capt.) Guard/Forward - Hingham

Bridget Driscoll

A highly-aggressive forward and guard, Driscoll's performance inside the paint led Hingham to a second-place finish in the Patriot League (10-2)… Captured her best performances in meetings with League rivals Duxbury, who edged the Harborwomen for the title…Was the team's leading scorer averaging just over 10 points per game…A solid three-point shooter and excellent foul shooter, Driscoll's impressive offensive abilities were coupled with her stellar defensive efforts…Her performance this season helped advance Hingham to the quarterfinals of the Div. 2 South Sectional tourney…Driscoll was also one of only five girls from south of Boston to compete in the Hoffman All-star Game, where she made key plays on the team's first four possessions…A two-time PL All-star, Driscoll is also a repeat All-Scholastic in basketball and also made our lacrosse squad after leading the Harborwomen to a state title and earning All-American status as a defensive player…Driscoll plans to attend Harvard University where she will continue her lacrosse career. Hingham coach Dave Hickey: "Bridget is the epitome of a leader. She knows she's talented and smart, but she doesn't think she's better than anyone else. There's not one kid on the team that would feel like they couldn't go up to her. That's just the kind of kid she is. It's unfortunate we can't keep her."

Hilary Gibson - Senior Forward - Hingham

Hilary Gibson

A two-time Patriot League All-star, Gibson was one of the Harborwomen's (17-5) best inside players… Extremely tough in the paint, Gibson was a workhorse on the offensive and defensive glass and was relentless when driving to the hoop for the Patriot League runners up…Although her numbers weren't as high as in season's past, Gibson continuously came up big when Hingham needed it most…Her aggressive style of play both offensively and defensively was key in the team's late-season win over league champs Duxbury and again when Hingham took on the Green Dragons in the championship game of the Massassoit Hall of Fame tourney…Also played well in Hingham's opening round and quarterfinal games in the Div. 2 South Sectional tourney…An Honorable Mention last season, this is Gibson's first appearance on a Mariner All-Scholastic squad…Gibson also plays soccer for HHS in the fall…She plans to attend either Miami or Rollins where she will continue her soccer or basketball career. Hingham coach Dave Hickey: "Hilary was always tough on defense and continually came up big in the forward/center spot. She's a great rebounder and is a key defender on our press."

Deidre King - Junior Guard - Hingham

Deidre King

Despite missing the latter half of the season due to an injury, King was still unanimously selected to the Patriot League All-star team for the second-straight year… Was Hingham's (17-5) second-leading scorer (9.4 ppg) before breaking her left wrist in a non-league game against Mansfield, in which she had scored half of the team's points…King still practiced some light shooting with the team throughout her recovery and returned for Hingham's game in the Div. 2 South Sectional quarterfinals… Got Hingham—the runners up in the PL—off to a great start at the beginning of the season, using her stellar ball handling skills and impressive speed to cut through defenses and drive to the hoop or take off on a fast break, both of which were instrumental in the Harborwomen's nine-game season opening win streak…King also continually came up big defensive plays particularly in close games, scoring the winning hoops on transition in two-point wins over Weymouth and Rockland…An Honorable Mention last season, this is King's first appearance on a Mariner All-Scholastic team….King will captain the team next winter. Hingham coach Dave Hickey: "She was so frustrated with the injury. She's our best ball handler, she's excellent defensively, and is a tough matchup with her quickness. You can't get her out of the gym."

Maureen Halloran - Senior (Capt.) Guard - Hanover

Maureen Halloran

A three-time All-star (two-time South Shore League, first-time Patriot League), Halloran was among the PL's top threats from behind the arch…A starter since her freshman year and a two-year captain, Halloran was the only senior on the very young Lady Indians team…Halloran was Hanover's leading scorer with 12.1 points per game…Constantly the focus of opponents defenses, Halloran was still continually able to hit a big hoop—particularly a trey…While she'd rather stay behind the arch, Halloran also came up big when driving to the hoop, especially when the shot clock was winding down…Halloran is making her second-straight appearance on the Mariner All-Scholastic hoop squad and also made our soccer team last fall…A soccer midfielder Halloran played an important role on Hanover's 2000 Div. 3 State Championship team…The senior plans to attend Northeastern University and is considering continuing her soccer career. Hanover coach Judy Schneider: "There was a lot of pressure on her as the only senior and she really handled it well. She works hard every game and is used to winning, so it was a little hard for her this season. Still, she was a great leader for the girls day in and day out. She never let them give up."

Carolyn King - Junior Forward/Guard - Hanover

Carolyn King

While her team had a tough time adjusting to the jump to the highly-competitive Patriot League, King's talents seemed undaunted… The junior can play just about every position and was the Lady Indians' second-leading scorer with an average 11 points per game…A great ball-handler, King's solid dribbling skills continually enabled her to cut through opponents defenses to the hoop or fake a defender en route to nailing a trey…Came into the spotlight last year, leading the team's offense in a six-game stint in which top point-getter Maureen Halloran was injured…A two-time All-star (one South Shore League, one PL), King has been the team's best free throw shooter for the past two years, averaging an impressive 78 percent…An Honorable Mention to the All-Scholastic team last year, King has already made two of our squads this season, having appeared on our field hockey squad last fall…The junior will start at catcher on HHS softball squad this spring. Hanover coach Judy Schneider: "Carolyn's really like a utility person for us. She's such a versatile athlete that she can play just about every position. She has an excellent shooting form and also takes it to the basket to draw the foul. She's already had a good career."

Sarah Cox - Junior Forward - Norwell

Sarah Cox

One of the most explosive offensive players on the South Shore…with 520 points this season in 23 games (a 22.6 points per game average), Sarah wrapped up her junior campaign with close to 1,200 career points…a consistent scorer despite facing a variety of defenses all season designed specifically to slow her down…much more than a scorer, though…the 5-foot-9 "swingman" is the Lady Clippers' best rebounder (over seven per game), ballhandler and passer (over four assists per game)…a very good spot up shooter, but she's absolutely deadly off the dribble—as she's equally adept at taking it all the way, pulling up for short range Js or threading a pass to a teammate…led Norwell to the semifinals of this year's Div. 4 south sectionals…constantly tries to involve teammates…if coach Bruce Emerson has one complaint about Sarah it's that she's too unselfish at times…averaged 16.8 points and 11 rebounds per game last season and 13.1 points per game as a frosh, often serving as the third option behind fellow 1,000-point scorers Maeve Barao and Jessie Weber (both 2001 graduates now playing in college)…not surprisingly, this team went unbeaten in South Shore League play and advanced to the Div. 3 south sectional championship game…plays AAU basketball year round with Abington star and close friend, Stephanie Morrissey (another Mariner All-Scholastic)…also a Patriot Ledger and Boston Herald All-Scholastic selection…played soccer her freshman and sophomore years at N.H.S., and will return to the team next Fall…despite having another year of high school to go, Sarah has already received dozens of letters from colleges with strong female hoops programs, including Assumption, Trinity and Roger Williams…is leaning toward majoring in Communications… Norwell coach Bruce Emerson (who took over at Norwell this winter after coaching Marshfield High's girls team for several years): "People told me how good Sarah was, so I was expecting a lot. But it wasn't until I saw her day-in and day out that she really blew me away. She's the epitome of a team player. She does all the little things to make herself and the team better. She's our hardest worker and she's an absolutely great person on top of it. "

Shauna Eyster - Junior Forward - Norwell

Shauna Eyster

A two year starter for the Lady Clippers and a key member of teams that advanced to the sectional finals and semifinals, respectively, the last two years…a South Shore League All-Star and Mariner All-Scholastic Honorable Mention last year…the Lady Clippers were at their best this season when Shauna had her "A" game to serve as a legitimate second option to star Sarah Cox…a tough scrapper in the paint who played much bigger than her slight 5-foot-7 frame might suggest…possesses a soft touch around the basket…averaged roughly nine points and six boards per game…has also played varsity field hockey the last three seasons, leading the Lady Clippers in scoring the last two and being named to a South Shore League All-Star team…sings with the Norwell Decibelles…would like to go to Boston College School of Nursing…Norwell coach Bruce Emerson: "Shauna was a key ingredient for our success this year. When she was on, she took us to another level as a team. She's a very nice player and I definitely feel she's not out of place on this (All-Scholastic) team."

Baseball team drops two in a row

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset baseball team started the 2002 campaign with bang, but that faded to a whimper in back-to-back losses this week, dropping the Skippers to 1-2 on the season.

It was the previously noted lack of pitching depth that bit the Skippers in Tuesday's 19-5 loss to South Shore League rival Mashpee. The visiting Falcons exploded for 20 hits, including three home runs against three different Cohasset pitchers.

"It was just a bad day for us," summed up coach Bob Knurek. "Mashpee hit well, and they played good solid baseball, but we shot ourselves in the foot way too much too."

Mashpee hurler Brad Stohr was the hero on both sides of the plate, going the rout for a complete game win and hitting for the cycle.

Only 12 of Mashpee's runs were earned, whereas all five of the Skippers runs were earned, with junior Mike Snowdale breaking out of a mini-slump to deliver a homer and a triple.

"We scored five runs, which on a lot of days wouldn't be bad," continued the veteran Cohasset coach. "But on this day we just had too many things working against us."

Norwell 9, Skippers 4

Norwell fireballer Bob Savoy proved a little bit too much for the Skippers in their South Shore League season opener Monday. The Clippers ace struck out 12 Cohasset hitters on his way to a complete game 9-4 win.

Cohasset's offensive highlights were provided by Chris McKenna (2-for-3) and Lewis Blanco (home run).

Skipers 10, Millis 3

Offense was the key in Saturday's season opening 10-3 win over Millis in non-league play.

A 4-0 Skippers lead grew to 9-0 with a five run explosion in the fifth, highlighted by a two run single by Ted Curry (2-for-3) and a three run dinger off the bat of freshman Ted Straughn (1-for-2).

Team captain Tim Straughn (Ted's brother) pitched five innings of shutout ball, scattering three hits and four walks while striking out four Millis hitters.

Baseball Notes

Knurek plans to come back with staff ace Tim Straughn in Thursday's home showdown against Norton (3:30, Milliken Field), another SSL rival. He's hoping for a pitching advantage, as the Lancers may be going with their number three pitcher in the rotation, this being their third game since Monday.

when we switched to man, that seemed to work out well."

Behind the defense was the very steady junior goalie Gia Petrakis, who recorded her 500th career save. In her three years as the team's starting netminder, Petrakis has averaged well over 10 saves per game.

The Lady Laxers did not fair as well against New Bedford this past Tuesday, falling 12-7 against another strong Div. 1 squad.

"They were a little faster than us," admitted Sweeney. "They were able to break our zone pretty consistently."

Because New Bedford had such great speed up front, they maintained a superb transition game, using the full width of the field. According to Sweeney, that is exactly the type of play he wants to see from his capable team.

"The more I watched, the more I saw of what I am trying to do with this team," he stated. "I am going to use this game as a teaching experience."

McKenney and Sheerin both recorded hat tricks, with Sheerin also adding an assist. Turgiss scored another goal, with Brady and Smith adding assists as well.

The team has no games scheduled over April break, but they should be an improved team when they meet back at the end of the month. Junior Sera Genovese, who averaged more than a goal per game last year, will be returning to the line-up. Also, senior Maggie O'Neill, a very fast and powerful athlete, will join the squad for the first time, adding some firepower on the attack.

The team will play its last game before vacation today, hosting Barnstable (4 p.m. start), and Sweeney also hopes to schedule a few JV match-ups to "get some mileage" on the six freshman and numerous sophomores on the team.

Boys track team knocks off Carver already qualified for the state meet in four events, captured a pair of first place finishes in the triple jump and 200-meter race. He's qualified for these two events, plus the javelin and as a member of the 4x100 relay team.

Senior Jay Bertovich, a newcomer to the program this spring, continued his mastery in the 110-meter hurdles, taking another first place. He also took a second in the javelin to teammate Pete Maitland, who has already qualified for the states in this event...no surprise there.

Maitland has been a jack-of-all-trades type for the Skippers, racking up points in several events—most consistently in the 800-meters, but his real bread and butter is the javelin. Last spring, Maitland threw the javelin at the New England track and field championships, becoming the first C.H.S. trackster in a decade to advance to this level.

First place points are essential for the undersized Skippers squad, and they came in bundles in Thursday's 80-56 win over league rival Norwell.

Tim Baird showed remarkable endurance by not only competing in, but also winning both the mile and 2-mile races. Jared Krupczak also notched twin first place medals in the long jump and 100-meter race.

On the field, first place finishes were turned in by Kidder (triple jump), Laney (discus), Maitland (javelin) and Liam Martin (high jump).

The boys and girls track teams are now off until after April vacation. They get back into action on the 23rd at home against SSL rival Hull. The scheduled April 29 showdown with Abington, which lost by one point to Carver, appears to be the big one on the boys slate right now, but LaFontain insists there is no team in this league his squad should take lightly.

"On any given day, anything can happen," said LaFontain, employing a favorite mantra of veteran coaches everywhere. "We can't take anyone lightly, especially with the numbers we have. If somebody for us has a bad day, or someone for the other team has a big day that could be the whole difference between winning and losing."

Girls report

Things have not turned out quite so well on the girls side of the ledger, as the young, rebuilding Lady Skippers dropped a pair of meets over the last week to fall to 0-3 on the season.

The girls lost to perennial powerhouse Norwell, 83-44, and were nipped by Carver, 71-63.

Junior Maura O'Brien, one of the few upperclassmen on the team, has been cleaning up in the high jump (qualified for states with her first place jump at Carver), as well as in the discus and hurdles.

Sophomores Jen Buckley (mile), Nicole Whitney (400) and Gilian Weber (800) also had some big first place finishes to keep things close against the host Lady Crusaders on Monday.

allows us to match up if a team tries to get physical with us."

Besides Kahn and Davis, Cohasset's other scorers were Libby, with a goal and two assists, Anderson with a goal, and Weber and Previte with assists.

On Saturday, Cohasset played a scrimmage game against Independent School League member Milton Academy, winning 10-8. The contest – the first against an ISL school – was highlighted by the reemergence of senior Paul Previte, a 50-goal scorer a year ago. Previte picked up his first of the season...and his second, third and fourth.

The Skippers trailed 5-4 at the half, but outscored their hosts 4-1 in the third quarter to take a lead they never relinquished. Other Cohasset scorers were Curt Kahn with a pair of goals and an assist, Eric Libby with a goal and an assist, senior midfielder Dave DeVito with a goal and an assist, Tom Anderson with a goal, senior midfielder Sean Chase with an assist, and junior midfielder John Durkin with an assist. Kyle Weber had 11 saves.

The Skippers host Pilgrim rival Falmouth Friday, tomorrow night (7 p.m. start) in the season's first night game at Alumni Field. On Tuesday, April 16, Cohasset travels to Canton High for a non-league contest starting at the vacation week time of 1 p.m..

Senior attackman and co-captain Paul Previte threw in three of his four goals in the first 4:28 of Tuesday's game, and Cohasset never looked back, rolling over Pilgrim League rival Scituate 15-5.

The Skippers, playing their first home game at Alumni Field, opened on all cylinders, as Previte took a pass from fellow senior and co-captain Eric Libby just 41 seconds into the contest and put the ball by Sailor netminder John Lincoln. Senior attackman Jason Moore would follow just 26 seconds later on a feed from junior attackman Curt Kahn, and the rout was on. Previte scored unassisted two minutes later, and finished the run at 4:28 of the first on a feed from Kahn, who would have six assists on the day.

"We never take a league rival lightly," said head coach Kevin Orcutt, "and we know Scituate and their players well. We wanted to come out strong, and set the pace early. We did that, and although we have a lot of mistakes to correct, I have to say that our focus and our effort were there."

Cohasset extended its lead to 7-1 at the end of the first quarter, and substituted liberally from then on. Almost all of the Skippers' 35-man roster saw action, and everyone would have were it not for the new rule instituted this season for eastern Massachusetts public school games that forces the timekeeper to keep the clock on as soon as one team gets 10 goals ahead of another. That occurred at the 6:13 mark of the third quarter, and the final quarter and a half were played without any stoppage.

"The rule has a point," said coach Orcutt, "but it hurts a team the size of ours, because we haven't been able to schedule junior varsity games. We wanted to play everybody, and simply ran out of time."

Besides Paul Previte, the Skippers got strong offensive games from junior attackman Curt Kahn, who had a season-high six assists and a goal, pushing his team-leading point total to 19, and from freshman Jake Previte, who notched a hat trick for his first scores as a varsity player. Moore had a pair of goals, and Libby picked up a goal and an assist. Other Cohasset scorers were junior midfielder Evan Pestone (his first in a Skipper uniform), and classmates John Durkin and Tom Anderson. Junior midfielder Matt Davis had a pair of assists.

"Our scoring was balanced," said Orcutt, "and we had nine assisted goals, which is what we were looking for against this opponent."

Cohasset goalies Kyle Weber and sophomore Nick Murphy were tested lightly. Weber had two saves, while allowing one goal in 20 minutes. Murphy has four saves and let in four goals in 40 minutes.

The Skippers host Falmouth on Friday in the first night game of the season, with a 7 pm faceoff set for Alumni Field. During the following vacation week, Cohasset travels to Canton for a Tuesday, April 16 matchup at the first-year team's field. That faceoff is set for 1 pm.

"We've got some players away on trips for both games," said Orcutt, "so we're once again facing some adversity. But we're getting mentally tougher every day, and we're looking forward to the coming challenges."

Boys sweep openers, girls drop first games

YOUTH LACROSSE REPORT

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse opened its 2002 season April 7 with a perfect slate of five wins from its boys teams, and with winning efforts but losing scores in the first two games ever for its new girls teams.

Cohasset was at its most dominant in Marshfield, where two of the boys teams combined to score 29 goals, while posting two shutouts. The rest of its teams were in Duxbury.

Here's a recap of the action:

In Marshfield, the season opened with Cohasset Blue 10-U (3rd and 4th grades) racing to a 10-0 victory. Max Shipp scored Cohasset's first goal of the season on a feed from Will Wise, and Cohasset quickly expanded its lead to 4-0 at halftime on the strength of two goals from Dean Driscoll— one assisted by Wise — and an unassisted tally from Wise.

Chris Brown — who split goaltending duties with Jack Murphy — helped Cohasset pull away in the second half, feeding Shipp twice and scoring once unassisted himself as Cohasset stretched the lead to 7-0. Wise scored his second goal of the game before Dean Driscoll brought his game high total to four goals — one off a Conor Queenan feed — to close out the scoring.

No shutout happens without stellar defense. Will Lynner's man-to-man coverage was stifling, while newcomers Nick Lieberman and Graham Stevenson both proved to be tough and quick to cover onrushing attackers.

Brown and Murphy not only kept Marshfield off the scoreboard, but also dominated face-off duties along with Paul Guinee.

The Cohasset Blue 12-U team (5th and 6th grades) did the young kids nine better later in the day, pasting Marshfield Green 19-0 in the season opener. As the score indicated, Cohasset dominated in all phases of the game.

Mike Grimm (5 goals, one assist) and Matt Burgess (2 g, 4 a) led the Blue squad with six points each. Chris Mills (4 g, 1 a) and Chris Rose (3 g, 1 a) each added hat tricks. Teddy Galligan (1 g, 3 a), Alexander Shipp (1/1) and Sam DeGiacomo (1/1) all exceeded their total points output from 2001.

Nathan Porter and Logan Chase closed out Cohasset's goal-scoring. Jake Cuneo and Chris Kuppens both added assists.

Meanwhile, in Duxbury, the Cohasset White 10-U team jumped out to a quick lead, with John Kearney and Chris Walsh both scoring on feeds from Eamon Davis. Enrico Teruzzi, Oliver Forrer and Davis then scored to give Cohasset a 5-0 first-quarter lead.

Duxbury narrowed the gap to 6-4 before the half, with Walsh's second goal of the game being Cohasset's only tally. Walsh then completed his hat trick in the third quarter to stake Cohasset to a 7-4 lead entering the final period.

From there, the two teams traded goals, with Davis and Kearney both picking up their second scores of the day and newcomer Andrew McKenna notching his first score, as Cohasset closed out a 10-7 win.

Taylor McQuade, Andrew Littauer and Thomas Pecca turned in outstanding defensive efforts to protect netminders Ian Quinlan and Kevin O'Connell, who split halves in the goal and kept Duxbury at bay.

Cohasset White 12-U followed with a convincing 15-4 win over Duxbury Gold.

Ironically, given the big final score, it was Cohasset's dominant defense and face-offer McKenna notching his first score, as Cohasset closed out a 10-7 win.

Taylor McQuade, Andrew Littauer and Thomas Pecca turned in outstanding defensive efforts to protect netminders Ian Quinlan and Kevin O'Connell, who split halves in the goal and kept Duxbury at bay.

Cohasset White 12-U followed with a convincing 15-4 win over Duxbury Gold.

Ironically, given the big final score, it was Cohasset's dominant defense and face-offaway a dozen Duxbury shots.

The Cohasset 14-U (7th and 8th grade) boys team overcame their own slow start and the opposition's late charge to beat Duxbury 13-12.

Aidan Buick picked up where he left off last year by getting the scoring started with the first of his five goals on the day. Buick and Corey Chase combined on several pretty goals, with Chase picking up three assists to lead the team in that category. Cohasset built a 6-4 half time lead by dominating the face-offs with Mike Pecca, Zack Etkind, Chris Davis and Parker Berg winning 20 of 29 for the game.

The lead was increased to 11-8 in the second half with Jared Kinch and Brandon Smith picking up two scores each with hard drives to the cage and Mike Bunstein and Austen Lanzillotti chipping in with one goal apiece. Etkind, Berg and Lanzillotti had one assist each for the game, making it nine different Cohasset players scoring at least one point.

The last five minutes of the game featured intense back-and-forth action with Cohasset and Duxbury trading goals and outstanding defensive plays. Pecca scored on an isolation play that started from the top of the box and finished with him beating two defenders for Cohasset's 12th goal. After Duxbury closed to within one goal, Kinch finished off the scoring for Cohasset with his third goal on the day. Duxbury would once again close the gap to one before Cohasset was able to stop a furious last second-rush, clear the ball and finish a great game.

Cohasset's depth, with four midfield lines, coupled with 13 saves in a strong game from first-year goalie Ben Libby and physical close defense from Mike Barnes, Jared Dick, Bobby Meikleham, Patrick Flynn, Jeff Brown and Andrew Clark were critical in the win.

Not far from where the boys were winning, the first-ever girls youth lacrosse games for Cohasset were unfolding too, with the 12-U girls dropping a 4-3 heartbreaker.

Cohasset dominated time of possession and was more aggressive on the ground balls, but had a tough time converting its chances into scores. Gabriella Flibotte scored the first of her two goals to stake Cohasset to a 1-0 lead early in the game, and Cohasset clung to that lead. Duxbury's opportunities were repeatedly thwarted by Cohasset's close defense of McKenna Teague, Stefi Belz, Rebecca Evans and Megan Richardson, backed by goaltender Thomson Jaffe.

Duxbury took the lead seconds into the final half, but Flibotte's second goal of the game tied the score. From there, the game became nerve-wracking, with both teams creating good opportunities. With three minutes left— after Duxbury had failed to convert a free-position scoring opportunity directly in front of the Cohasset goal— Cohasset re-took the lead. Kenzie Durkin scored unassisted off a free position.

Unfortunately, Cohasset couldn't hold the lead, allowing Duxbury to score twice in the last 90 seconds of the game, spoiling what could have been a winning effort. Cohasset was particularly tough on ground balls, led by Teague, Flibotte, Maura Barnes, Katelyn Ryan and Samantha Fortin. Jaffe finished the game with seven saves in net.

Cohasset's 14-U girls team took the field next, facing a much older and more experienced Duxbury team, where most of the players had three or four years of playing experience compared to three or four weeks for the Cohasset squad.

That difference showed early, as Duxbury jumped out to a two-goal lead just two minutes into play. From there, Cohasset settled down, but struggled to get its offense going. After two more Duxbury goals, Caren Garber scored midway through the first half to close the gap to 4-1. Duxbury led 5-1 at half.

Cohasset had its opportunities in the second half, but again had trouble converting. Haley Haracz, Kathryn Evans, Lindsay Durkin, Michelle Madge and Jessica Wheelwright particularly got into the aggressive flow of the game, but failed scoring opportunities for Cohasset became long scoring runs for Duxbury, which effectively moved the ball for open shots, ultimately earning a 12-1 victory.

Aisling Guinee, who saw more rubber in the Cohasset net than most people would see while visiting a tire factory, stood tall as Cohasset's goalie, making 14 saves on the day, most of them against shooters who were no more than a few steps off the goal crease.

Police get new bulletproof vests

By Evan Schiff
ESCHIFF@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Police Department is now better equipped to handle a dangerous situation. Thanks to Sgt. John Conte, the force recently received 21 new bulletproof vests.

Conte worked in conjunction with the Massachusetts Executive Office of Public Safety and was able to procure the vests through the Bulletproof Vest Reimbursement Program. They came at no cost to the town.

"Officer safety is always a concern," said Chief Bob Jackson. "We do everything we can to make sure our officers are soundly protected."

According to Jackson, the new vests are significantly better than the old ones. He describes them as lighter, softer, thinner, more flexible and more breathable. He said the vests provide all these amenities and still provide the same, if not a higher, level of protection.

"They fit right under our jackets and don't bulge out," Jackson said. "They're a marked improvement over the last ones."

The vests are replacing the heavier predecessors, which are eight-years-old. The department will donate the old vests to two national guard units.

"The old ones are still really good vests," Jackson said. "These are just an upgrade."

"Officer safety is always a concern."
— Chief Bob Jackson

Currently it's an individual choice for the officers to wear the vests, but Jackson said he wants to make it a condition of employment for new hires that they wear them. He said the new vests are individually fitted, whereas the last ones made officers, "look like Ninja turtles."

Jackson said in his more than 20 years on the force he couldn't recall an incident where a vest came into play – but an incident could occur and the vest could save an officer's life.

"We always plan for the worst and hope for the best," he said.

The vests not only protect from bullets but any sharp object.
